LETTER FROM THE CHAIRMAN

Writing the “Year in Review 2001” section of the Annual Report for the past year was an emotional and stressful experience. While the Annual Reports to Congress of the J. William Fulbright Foreign Scholarship Board are typically upbeat, and highlight the positive accomplishments of all of the people from 141 countries who contribute their time, effort, and energy to the educational exchanges that are at the heart of the Fulbright Program, this year involved a sea change.

The events of September 11 — the brutal murders of thousands of innocent civilians from 88 countries who were simply attending to their daily activities — cast a pall around the globe. Suddenly, the world seemed a much less safe place. Suddenly, Americans, in particular, realized — in many instances for the first time — how fragile life is for millions of people in countries and regions where conflict is endemic.

The need for rapid action to combat terrorists who attack innocent civilians, and the nations that harbor them, was immediately apparent, but such an approach is, inevitably, only a tentative step toward a more peaceful world. As has happened before, the world is at a cross road. Leaders can throw up their hands and say little can be done to reduce violence and conflict among peoples and nations, or they can seek solutions.

The Fulbright Scholarship Program, like the Marshall Plan after World War II, represents a pragmatic and proactive approach to the emerging crisis. Operating on a shoestring financially, the Program creates the seeds of hope for a more tolerant world by person-to-person experiences of educators, professionals, and future political leaders from our partner countries who spend substantial time living in the United States and by Americans who study, teach, and do research abroad. Fulbrighters return to their home countries, where they are able to spread the knowledge, information, and perspectives that can be gained only by such a firsthand experience.

We have chosen to focus the Annual Report for 2001 on the Fulbright Program in the Muslim world, and the response by the Fulbright community — current and former grantees, professional staff members in Fulbright Commissions around the globe, government officials, staff of non-profit organizations, and volunteers — to the challenge of terrorism. Subsequent sections of the Report provide an in-depth picture of Fulbright activities in the United States and our partner countries during the year.

I am convinced that the Fulbright Program — a program of bi-national cooperation — is effective because it benefits all of the countries which participate. Senator Fulbright’s vision that participants in the Program will expand their horizons and dedicate themselves to greater tolerance and understanding of foreign cultures, values, and peoples is not a naïve ideal, but a practical means toward an important global goal for the 21st century.

THE FULBRIGHT PROGRAM IN THE ISLAMIC WORLD

On September 11, 2001 thousands of innocent men, women and children from all over the world were killed in New York, Washington, and Pennsylvania, and hundreds of firefighters and policemen died heroically. This one day brought home to the people of the United States the degree of distrust and misunderstanding that exists between peoples of westernized countries and those in some predominantly Islamic countries.

The Fulbright Program was started in the aftermath of World War II, when Senator J. William Fulbright, his colleagues in Congress, and President Harry Truman searched for ways to reduce the misunderstandings that bred hatred and set the stage for open conflict. Fulbright argued that exchanges of individuals — particularly individuals who were likely to play a leadership role in their societies — would lead to greater understanding and tolerance of differences. He believed that living in another country for a substantial period of time would help individuals to comprehend cultural differences, which might obscure the common interests of humanity in peace, dignity, freedom, security, and opportunity.

Thus, the Fulbright educational exchange program was started, and it played a major role in efforts to bring democracy and progress to America’s former enemies in World War II. It also played an important role in both the struggle against communist totalitarianism and the rebuilding of nations after the demise of communism.

Today it appears that while conflicts between nations or groups of nations will undoubtedly continue, “asymmetrical conflicts” between nations and organized terrorists are as dangerous and threatening as the conflicts between nations that dominated the 20th century.

What is the role that the Fulbright Program can and should play in this new era? In order to begin to answer that question, this report on the Fulbright Program in the Islamic World has been divided into three sections: the first on September 11 and its aftermath, the second on the Fulbright Program in the Islamic World prior to September 11, and the third on the future direction of Fulbright exchanges with predominantly Muslim countries.

SEPTEMBER 11 AND ITS AFTERMATH

On the morning of September 11, over 2,000 Fulbright student grantees, research scholars, lecturers, and professionals from 140 countries had recently arrived in the United States and host countries abroad. Nearly all Fulbrighters are attached to universities, and the academic year had just begun in most countries.

The Fulbright Scholarship Board was meeting in Washington, at the State Department Annex building, which houses the Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs (ECA). When the plane hit the Pentagon, just across the Potomac River, the State Annex building was evacuated. By the next day, however, everyone was back at work, preoccupied with the fate of colleagues, and Fulbright students and scholars in the New York and Washington areas.

ECA staff, as well as their colleagues from non-profit organizations which provide administrative support, contacted grantees who might have been in harm's way to confirm their safety and to offer support if needed. Fulbright Commissions in 50 countries and Public Diplomacy officers at 90 U.S. Embassies abroad contacted the American grantees who had just arrived in their host countries. Fortunately, there were no casualties among the current Fulbrighters.

The next major task was to ensure that visiting students and scholars were shielded from any possible public backlash in the United States. President Bush, Secretary of State Powell, and Attorney General Ashcroft made strong statements against harassment, threats and attacks on Arab-Americans and other individuals perceived to be of Middle Eastern origin. Messages of sympathy and support poured into Washington, to Fulbright Commissions abroad, and to U.S. Embassies from hundreds of Fulbright and Humphrey Program alumni from all over the world.

The attacks were a clarion call to the Fulbright Program to redouble its efforts to increase understanding of American society in the Muslim world, as well as increase knowledge of the cultures, values, and hopes of the diverse peoples of Muslim nations. Many actions were taken by Fulbright grantees, both in the United States and abroad, to share their special insights into the nature of cross-cultural conflict and the ways in which it can be reduced by developing mutual respect and understanding.

A partial list follows:

- A colloquium featuring 20 Arab Fulbright graduate students from 11 countries with 20 American graduate students from the University of Maryland was held for two days in October to discuss reactions to the September 11 events and Arab-American relations. The colloquium was one of several events on college campuses nationwide sponsored by the State Department and AMIDEAST aimed at open dialogue about U.S.-Arab relations. ABC's Nightline covered the colloquium, and articles were published in The New York Times, The Washington Post, The Chronicle of Higher Education, and other U.S. and Arab media. In addition, the Arab Fulbrighters participated in a live two-hour interview in Arabic on Al Jazeera television, the most popular television network in the Arab world.

AMIDEAST held a conflict resolution conference with Middle Eastern grantees to discuss the events surrounding September 11th, and its impacts on the global community. Students also discussed their own personal feelings, and discussed views on tolerance.

Nadia Abdulhaq, a Palestinian studying at the University of Florida, said, "I was expecting the U.S.A. I had imagined from movies, but realized it's not all tall buildings and people who have everything. Our images of each other are far simpler than reality." She spoke from personal

This broadcast received widespread coverage in the Middle East and North Africa.

One participant, Riham Bahi, an Egyptian student on a Fulbright at Northeastern University, said that "The point is that you hear the other party's view, and it gives you a chance to respond and clarify points. Despite what conflict you have between governments, people can always try to understand each other. That's really important now."

Amal Almurbati, a student from Bahrain attending Old Dominion University, said both Arabs and Americans have misperceptions because of biased and inaccurate reporting.

experience about the importance of face-to-face discussion, saying, “I live in Palestine, and though we are in conflict with Israel, I have attended camps with Israeli friends. We did discuss things fiercely, but we got a perspective on what’s going on.” She added, “Fear of the unknown is the problem.”

- In December, the Lontar Foundation of Jakarta published Manhattan Sonnet, a book of poems, essays, and short stories about New York composed by Indonesian writers, including pieces by three Fulbright alumni who are among that country’s most renowned thinkers, poets, and essayists. The book is dedicated to the memory of the victims of the attacks, and profits from sales will go to the American-Indonesian Exchange Foundation (AMINEF), which manages the Fulbright Program. Three of the six members of the Lontar Foundation Board are Fulbrighters, and one of the editors is on the AMINEF Board.

A program entitled “Infinite Humanity: World Religions for Peace and Respect for Life, A Gathering in Prayer” was created by Indonesian Fulbright alumnus I. Wayan Dibia and American alumna Jody Diamond and held at ground zero and other locations world-wide, including four sites in Indonesia.

Professor Jani Purnawanty, who was a Fulbright scholar at Temple University, called on the Indonesian government to end anti-American initiatives in an article published in the Jakarta Post.

- A Chilean Fulbrighter, Rodrigo Borja-Ceron, conducted “Voices of Hope,” a benefit concert for the World Trade Center Relief Fund in New York City in mid-November. Mr. Borja-Ceron is pursuing a Master’s Degree in choral conducting at the Mannes School of Music.

- One key priority of the Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs and the Board is finding a way to enhance the Fulbright experience and ensure that the experience provides participants with a deeper understanding of U.S. society and engages them with Americans. ECA provides funds to cooperating agencies to do this. One example is Metro International’s work. Metro is a New York non-profit organization that for many years has hosted and cared for international students and Fulbrighters from every part of the world.

Following the events of September 11, Metro International brought together New Yorkers and international students in a number of programs. An Open Forum on “Exploring the Meaning of September 11 in an International Context” was held in October of 2001 for 80 participants from 32 countries, including locally based Fulbright students.

Metro International also began a new program called “Dinner Diplomats” to reach out to students by inviting them to private homes for informal dinners to show them that they were welcome in New York.

The Citizens’ Committee for New York City gave Metro International a grant to underwrite Global Classroom programs in two public schools close to ground zero. Fulbright students are among those that visit classrooms to talk about their home countries. Also contributing funds to this project was the renowned graphic artist Milton Glazer, a Fulbright alumnus and friend of Metro International.

- Fulbright alumnus Philip Heymann, who is a Professor of Law at Harvard University, is donating the revenues and royalties from his critically acclaimed book Terrorism and America: A Commonsense Strategy for a Democratic Society, to the American of the tragedy. He enlisted the aid of former Senator Bob Dole and former President Bill Clinton to raise funds.

• Fulbright alumnus Tom Gouttierre, considered one of America's foremost experts on Afghanistan, has given over 500 interviews to U.S. and foreign media organizations, and made presentations to policy makers, relief organizations, and educational groups. Now Dean of International Studies and Programs at the University of Nebraska at Omaha, Gouttierre spent nearly ten years in Afghanistan as a Peace Corps Volunteer, a Fulbright Fellow, and as Executive Director of the Afghan-American Educational Commission (the Fulbright Foundation) in Kabul from 1971 to 1974. Since his Fulbright experience, Mr. Gouttierre has worked tirelessly to improve relations between the U.S. and Afghanistan, establishing an exchange program with Kabul University, developing linkages between Nebraska and Afghan educational institutions in war-torn areas, and directing teacher training, curriculum development, and educational projects that benefited more than 130,000 Afghan school children between 1986 and 1994, when the Taliban came to power.

• Professor Michael Spath, a Fulbright Scholar at the Royal Institute of Inter-Faith Studies in Amman, Jordan in 1998, lectured on "Islam and Jihad: Clearing Up False Perceptions" in Fort Wayne, Indiana in late October. The lecture was taped and rebroadcast on radio station WBNI. Dr. Spath is a professor of philosophy and theology at the University of St. Francis in Fort Wayne.

• Dr. Tanja Popovic, a 1989 Scholar from Croatia, is the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention expert on anthrax. She is playing a key role in the CDC's work to improve the public health response to acts of bioterrorism.

• Five prominent Fulbright alumni, Dr. Joshua Lederberg, Laura D'Andrea Tyson, Philip Odeen, Martin Feldstein, and Edward Djerejian, are serving on the Council on Foreign Relations' "Task Force On America's Response to Terrorism."

INDIVIDUAL RESPONSES TO 9/11

While reports of many of the activities of Fulbright grantees and alumni in the months after the attacks in New York and Washington convey an impression of how the Fulbright community rallied, letters and first-person newspaper articles convey a profound emotional response to what happened. Three such statements are printed in the next few pages.

The first is a letter by Moroccan Fulbrighter Mehdi Ksikes to the Moroccan-American Commission for Educational and Cultural Exchange and the members of the Fulbright Business Advisory Council in Morocco. Ksikes was an eyewitness to the attack on the World Trade Center.

At the time I was selected for the Fulbright-Mobil Oil Maroc Award to pursue my studies in the United States, I felt certain it would be a life-changing experience. However, I never imagined that I would be an eyewitness to the horrific events of September 11th, which, to say the least, have marked me forever.

After completing my MBA at New York University in June 2001, I began a twelve-month internship with a leading investment bank on Wall Street. On that fateful Tuesday, I was in my office on the 17th floor of the World Financial Center, one of the closest buildings to the World Trade Center, when tragedy struck....

Like many others, I have been giving much thought to the problems, which seem to lie at the roots of the unjustifiable and inhuman attacks of September 11th. The worsening economic and social conditions in many developing countries has led to desperation which can all too easily be exploited by extremist groups to advance their own agendas. Another factor is the profound lack of mutual understanding and insufficient respect for cultural, religious and ideological differences. These differences all too easily develop into a fear of the other, resulting in hatred, racism and terrorism.

To my mind, the Fulbright Exchange Program and similar initiatives can and do make important contributions to addressing both of these problems.

Such programs enable people from other countries to gain an advanced level of education at American universities in fields that can help their countries further develop and prosper economically. While other forms of cooperation and aid are also vital, the Fulbright Program, with its focus on individual merit and academic and professional excellence, is a unique means of educating future leaders in a wide range of fields who can facilitate the technology transfer and promotion of international networks that are so essential for reducing poverty, attracting direct foreign investment and creating jobs.

One of the most central missions of the Fulbright Program is to increase the awareness, tolerance and acceptance of differences between Americans and people of other nationalities. As a Fulbright student and now as an intern, I have had the enormous privilege of being an ambassador of my country in the U.S. I have made a conscious effort to inform my American friends and colleagues about my country, religion and culture. Since September 11th I have become a militant advocate of the imperative need to reinforce programs such as the Fulbright Program which seek to build and maintain bridges of understanding between the peoples and nations of this world. I believe educational exchange is one of the most important means of combating those who promote hatred and terror under the banner of perverted religious concepts. It is now more critical than ever before to support the Fulbright Program....

Mamoun Fandy, an Egyptian who came to the United States on a Fulbright Scholarship in 1985, returned to Egypt, and ultimately settled in the United States, published this op-ed piece in The Washington Post in response to the September attacks. He is now a professor at the Near East-South Asian Center for Strategic Studies at the National Defense University. The article entitled, "How I Became a Recruit for America" has been excerpted and reprinted with permission of the author.] ♦

Muslim students studying in the United States can be a bridge between the two worlds. I should know; I was one of them. In 1985 I came to Washington on a summer Fulbright scholarship to study linguistics at Georgetown University. Then I returned to Egypt to teach for a year. But I was drawn back to the States and earned my master's and PhD in political science. All these years later, I remain here. America has made me more than I was intended to be, and for that I am grateful. But while I have benefited immensely, I can say with some certainty that America profits, too, from the broadened horizons such exchanges bring.

From 1977 to 1985, I had been a student and then a teaching assistant at Assiut University in the Egyptian city of the same name. That university was a hotbed of fundamentalism back then and remains so. I came from a working-class family in southern Egypt, and many of those I grew up with were attracted to fundamentalism. My parents were illiterate. Their only means of survival was their loom: The whole family wove cloth used by the Sudanese for ceremonial occasions. My parents struggled to send their five boys and one girl to the local public school.

At Assiut, several of my contemporaries.... landed in prison for their role in the 1981 assassination of Egyptian President Anwar Sadat. Other classmates left for Afghanistan in the 1980s. Ayman al-Zawahiri...now Osama bin Laden's right-hand man used to come down from Cairo to recruit on campus for Egyptian Islamic Jihad. As someone whose family background gave him few opportunities in society, I fit the profile of a potential soldier of God.

Instead, I was recruited by Fulbright. My journey thus led to American academia instead of to Kandahar. The focus of my research and teaching, however, has always been about that road not taken, about the world of Islamists. My path has thus crossed theirs in Egypt, Saudi Arabia and the West.

If Fulbright and my family saved me from the world of fundamentalism, an American education has helped many others to go back and make a difference in the lives of their own countries and communities. Many people in positions of leadership in the Arab and Muslim world studied at U.S. colleges and universities. That's true of several liberal columnists at Arab newspapers and of my good friend Abdul Rahaman Al-Rashid, the chief editor of the pan-Arab daily Asharq Al-Awsat. Those individuals make a difference in how America is perceived in the Muslim world.

Consider two close allies of the United States in the Arab world: Egypt and Saudi Arabia. Egyptian Prime Minister Atef Obeid has a doctorate from the University of Illinois. The man in charge of turning Egypt's economy around, Yousef Boutros Boutros-Ghali, is an MIT alumnus. The high number of American university graduates in the Egyptian cabinet is key to sustaining U.S.-Egypt relations. Furthermore, many in the Egyptian armed forces had some training at American military academies. This is what led them to cooperate during Desert Storm in 1990-91....

When I arrived in Washington....I saw things in this country that did not match what I had read in the Arab press about the imperialist American view. I saw a society in the making. America sees itself as a human project to which anyone can contribute. I jumped at the chance....

It is easy to see danger in times of crisis. But this is also a time of opportunity. If there is a lesson to be learned from September 11, it is about the mutual need in the United States and in the Muslim world for a greater knowledge of each other. Young Muslims who come to America to study help bridge that gap.

Ali Jalal was a Fulbright student grantee from Jordan who received an MBA from Purdue University in June 2001. While at Purdue, he was an outstanding student, earning a 3.97 GPA out of a possible 4.0, and was recognized as a leader in the business school. On September 11 he was living near Syracuse, New York, and completing his Fulbright experience by working as an intern at the Carrier Corporation. He wrote the following letter, which has been excerpted, to Alain McNamara, the Executive Director of the Jordanian-American Commission for Educational Exchange:

...I am writing to you as I am coming to the end of my academic training in the U.S..... As I reflect on the last three years, I have a lot to be grateful about and I would like to share a few words with you.

First, I am very thankful for the opportunity provided to me by Fulbright to come to the U.S., to study, train and build wonderful friendships. Indeed, I have gained in three years more than I thought was possible by me. That gain was academically in terms of my degree, professionally in terms of my training (at Goldman Sachs and Carrier) and personally in terms of cultural exposure.... Indeed, I believe that I am now better prepared to contribute — and even initiate in some cases — to the positive change and development of my country....

Last but not least, as we look back on the tragedies of September 11th, its effects and the current affairs around the world, I see many people looking at each other across borders with only hatred, fear and anger. I am grateful that this experience has provided me with a new way of thinking and understanding of the world such that I can look for hope, reconciliation and mutual development....

I have realized that most Americans are just like most Jordanians, who want to live in peace, go about their lives doing their jobs, bringing up their families in a decent environment and generally have a good and relatively uneventful life. I have always believed (even before I came to the U.S.) that we in the Arab world have a lot to learn from the U.S. However, I never realized that listening was one of the most important. We listen the first time and if we like what we hear or if we dislike what we hear, we form a view of that civilization and that's it.... Indeed...we need to communicate better. I have always respected people's differences, now I feel that I need to learn from those differences.

If I had to name the most valuable benefit in my Fulbright scholarship, it would be the ability to open my mind and try to understand the other person, to learn from them...

I hope that future Jordanian Fulbright scholars continue to learn and experience this. I have always admired the striving for excellence and being the best. I have seen this many times in the U.S., whether in its relatively short history, or management systems or life styles. We must also strive in excellence and realize that it is not only in academic degrees but also with our way of thinking....

AN HISTORICAL OVERVIEW OF THE FULBRIGHT PROGRAM IN PREDOMINANTLY MUSLIM COUNTRIES

While graduate student, faculty, and professional exchanges under the Fulbright mantle have had a long history in parts of the Muslim world, the Fulbright Program has existed for less than a decade in certain countries. In Egypt, Indonesia, Pakistan, and Turkey, the Program is more than a half-century old. In some of the new independent states of the former Soviet Union, which are predominantly Islamic and in the states bordering the Persian Gulf, it was started later.

As a result of agreements between the United States and the governments of seven countries — Egypt, Indonesia, Jordan, Malaysia, Morocco, Pakistan, and Turkey — the Program is administered in the host country by a Commission usually composed of four citizens of that nation appointed by the Prime Minister or Minister of Education, and four Americans living in the country appointed by the U.S. Ambassador.

The Commission hires an Executive Director and staff, many of whom are citizens of the host country. The Fulbright Program in these countries operates in a binational manner, with decisions made in a cooperative fashion by representatives of both countries. The Commission countries tend to be those with long-standing, relatively stable programs, a substantial number of grants to students and scholars, and comparatively large budgets. Many of the Executive Directors in these countries have reached out to universities and the private sector, often with the leadership and cooperation of the U.S. ambassador, to raise additional funds to supplement money received from one or both governments.

In a number of the other countries of the predominantly Muslim world, the Fulbright Program has a small budget and often offers only a few grants annually.

What has been accomplished as a result of the efforts and commitment of all those who have worked with the Program over the past half-century? It is difficult to measure the impact of Fulbright exchanges, since the gains are not always immediate, concrete, or obvious, nor can we quantify the multiplier effect of grantees who return home and spread the knowledge and perspectives gained during their Fulbright grants, but in other ways the long-term benefits to civil society and universal human interests are obvious.

Many Americans have little knowledge of geography, foreign languages, or different cultures. Few individuals speak such languages as Arabic, Pashtu, Turkish, or Urdu and an even smaller number have lived in the Islamic countries of the Middle East and South Asia. Fulbright scholarships have enabled a small but influential number of American graduate students, academics, and professionals to live abroad and to acquire an understanding of these cultures. The events of September 11 have shown that more needs to be done to inform Americans about Muslims and to promote understanding, sympathy, and tolerance of differences.

While some argue that Arabs and non-Arab Muslims have a better understanding of America than vice versa, much of the information they receive about the United States comes from movies, the press, and television and this is rarely an accurate portrayal of America. In fact, we may make it easy for hostile leaders to prejudge America and to turn the American people into caricatures. Only by living in the United States, as foreign Fulbrighters do, can they grasp the extent to which media-driven stereotypes falsify the underlying reality of life in America.

One tangible measure of the success of the Fulbright Program in the Muslim world is the number of alumni who have achieved remarkable success in their societies. Many Fulbright alumni are professors at universities, where they are in a position to educate their students and correct their misperceptions. Many Fulbright alumni have achieved influence outside the classroom. A partial listing of prominent Fulbright alumni from the Islamic world appears on pages 18 to 19 of this report.

A listing of names of individual leaders from the Muslim countries who held Fulbright grants early in their careers does not, however, do justice to the overall Fulbright effort. In order to understand the scope of the Program, both today and historically, it is necessary to examine data on the number of grants to and from each country in 2001, and the cost of these exchanges. Table 1, on the following page, presents this information.

- 3. The U.S. component was suspended in Gaza, the West Bank, Pakistan, and Yemen in 2001 due to security concerns.
- 4. The countries in the Gulf States Regional Program are Saudi Arabia, United Arab Emirates, Kuwait, Oman, Qatar, and Bahrain.
- 5. The predominantly Muslim countries in the Independent States of former Soviet Russia include Azerbaijan, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan, and Uzbekistan. The U.S. component was suspended in some parts of the NIS in the mid-1990s due to security concerns, but has been re-started.
- 6. The predominantly Muslim countries in the sub-Saharan Regional Program include Senegal, Mali, Guinea, and Niger.

In addition to the grantees in the table above, who receive Fulbright scholarships and fellowships under the program administered by the U.S. Department of State, roughly an additional 10 percent of Americans receive Fulbright grants through a program administered by the U.S. Department of Education. This program, unlike the State Department program, is for Americans only, and is designed principally to strengthen skills in non-western foreign languages and area studies. In 2001, doctoral dissertation research awards were awarded by the Department of Education for studies in Islamic countries as follows: Indonesia 5, Egypt 3, Malaysia 2, Syria 2, Kyrgyzstan 2, Iran 1, Lebanon 1, Morocco 1, Pakistan 1, and Uzbekistan 1. Group projects and seminars abroad introduced 31 Americans to Egypt, 16 to Malaysia, 16 to Morocco and 12 to Jordan. In addition, one faculty member received a grant for research in Egypt.

Since the Fulbright Program was started, over 7,000 graduate students and young professionals from the predominantly Muslim countries of the Middle East, North Africa, Turkey, and Asia have studied in the United States on Fulbright Student grants. More than 3,000 scholars from these countries have come to American universities to lecture or do research on Fulbright Scholar grants. Over 500 mid-career professionals in select career fields have received Hubert H. Humphrey Fellowships to the U.S. in a program that combines academic training and practical experience. Finally, an additional 1,500 citizens from these countries have received awards to participate in the Fulbright Teacher Exchange program, summer seminars, or other activities. All visiting Fulbright grantees return to their own countries for a minimum of two years upon completing their grants.

Nearly 2,000 American students have learned first-hand about the Muslim world on Fulbright grants to these countries and over 3,500 academics have lectured or done research at universities in the countries of the Islamic world. Finally, nearly 5,000 Americans have taken part in Fulbright group projects abroad, seminars, and the Fulbright Teacher Exchange Program in Muslim countries. These total figures for Americans include citizens who have won Fulbright grants through programs administered by the Department of State and programs under the Fulbright-Hays Act administered by the Department of Education. A country-by-country breakdown of grants in 2001 and total grants is presented in the charts at the back of the Annual Report.

The Fulbright Program has enabled over 12,000 opinion-leaders of Muslim countries to gain an in-depth understanding of the United States and its people, and to return to their countries to share what they have learned. Many of them have taught at American universities during their stay in the United States, and shared information on their own societies with their American students and colleagues.

Similarly, over 10,000 Americans have competed for and won Fulbright grants to Islamic countries. Student grantees have taken academic courses, done research for masters and doctoral theses, or enhanced their skills as journalists, artists, writers, or musicians. Above all, however, they have learned first-hand about Islamic societies. Scholar grantees have taught students at host country universities, interacted with academic colleagues, done research, and returned to their own colleges and universities prepared to challenge misperceptions and stereotypes about the Muslim world. ♦

THE FUTURE OF THE FULBRIGHT PROGRAM IN THE ISLAMIC WORLD

The attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon on September 11 have made it clear that some fanatics who hate the United States are prepared to commit terrorist attacks on innocent civilians.

Retreat and isolationism on the part of the United States are not options, but an acceptance of defeat. Public diplomacy is an antidote to fanaticism since it focuses on counteracting misperceptions and misunderstandings. Because the Fulbright Program enables participants, many of whom become opinion leaders, to develop more sophisticated views as a result of educational exchanges, it is an ideal weapon in the struggle to reduce conflict, violence, and misunderstanding.

The Presidentially-appointed Fulbright Scholarship Board, which is responsible by law for setting policies for the Program, recognized the need for increasing exchanges with the Islamic countries in the late 1990s, and requested ECA to develop new exchange programs to accomplish this goal. The Board sought an increase of $10 million in the annual appropriation for Fulbright to meet critical needs in China, the Islamic World, Africa, and the Newly Independent States. The additional funds were not appropriated, but programs were developed and enhanced with available funds.

These programs include the Fulbright Conflict Resolution Program, which was so successful in its initial year, 2000, that it was expanded in 2001. The goal of the Program in 2000 was to enhance non-governmental efforts to resolve political, social, and sectarian conflicts in the Middle East by bringing together, for a year of study in the United States, talented and motivated practitioners, early in their professional careers, who will return to their countries to work on the community-level. In 2000, four graduate students from the West Bank, Israel, Egypt, and Lebanon and two scholars from Morocco and Israel took part.

In 2001, eight grantees from India, Pakistan, Sri Lanka, and Nepal enrolled together in a graduate program in conflict transformation at Eastern Mennonite University. They then participated in an intensive Summer Peacebuilding Institute, followed by practical training with non-governmental organizations working in their field of interest. Upon completion of the Program, grantees received a Master's degree or a graduate certificate in Conflict Transformation. The unique feature of the new Program is that the grantees are all placed at the same American institution, rather than being placed at different universities and together they study and socialize, along with American students also interested in conflict management. A similar program for South Asia is under way.

With the success of these programs, plans now call for a program in conflict resolution in 2002 for Africans from four East African countries.

The Fulbright Scholarship Board is monitoring these initiatives carefully to determine if collaborative programming involving countries and regions in conflict should become a regular part of the Fulbright mandate.

Since September 11, the President, the Department of State, Congress, and the media have concluded that America's public diplomacy programs in the Islamic world need to be strengthened. Following the collapse of communism, the U.S. Government cut back significantly its funding of educational exchange, as well as cultural and information programs. In Pakistan, for example, five American cultural centers were shuttered; in Turkey, two American libraries, a cultural center, and a consulate were closed. Funding for foreign exchange programs, measured in constant dollars, fell by nearly one-third between 1993 and 2000, although a small part of the cuts was restored in 2001. However, even with this restoration, current funding is still more than 20% below 1995 levels. American cultural and intellectual outreach to the Arab world, in particular, declined dramatically.

By the end of 2001, planning was under way to reinvigorate public diplomacy efforts, including, among others, efforts to:

- Restart the Fulbright Program in Afghanistan
- Bring Afghani women teachers to the U.S. on exchanges
- Print and distribute nearly 10 million textbooks to Afghani children
- Expand the Fulbright Foreign Language Teaching Assistantship Program to bring young teachers from Morocco, Jordan and Egypt to American universities to teach Arabic. A similar program is planned for Turkish teachers.

The Fulbright Scholarship Board has set its sights high, on an Islamic Exchange Initiative that would require an additional appropriation of $20 million to expand academic exchanges in both directions, involving scholars, students, teachers and mid-career professionals. The Board wrote to President Bush and Secretary of State Powell to explain how the funds would be used to build understanding, trust, and a sense of shared interests between the peoples of the Islamic world and the United States. The Fulbright Program has a proven record as the crown jewel of American public diplomacy. It has the infrastructure, talented administrators, policies and programs in place to expand rapidly when new funds become available. ♦

During Karim Raslan's Fulbright grant in 2001-2002 at the Southern Asian Institute at Columbia University, he dedicated much of his time and attention to "convincing Americans that not all Muslims are terrorists." His Fulbright grant project was entitled "Freedom of Expression in Islamic Studies."

Raslan, who is from Malaysia, is a modern day renaissance man — an accomplished lawyer, political analyst, art critic and author. He has published two books, Ceritalah: Malaysia in Transition (a collection of essays commenting on Malaysia's recent socioeconomic and political development) and Heroes and Other Stories. Sir V.S. Naipaul, the Nobel Laureate, described Raslan's Ceritalah book as "elegant and educated."

Raslan is set to launch his third book Ceritalah 2: Journeys Through Southeast Asia in the fall of 2002. Ceritalah 2, a collection of essays, personal profiles, travel writings and art criticism, has already received considerable advance publicity and praise, with Thailand's former Foreign Minister Surin Pitsuwan saying, "A crisp and clear voice of reason, Karim points the way how Southeast Asia's Islam could provide a model for other parts of the Muslim world struggling to face modernity and globalization." Raslan is also at work on a novel to be called Desire, the first in an anticipated quartet following the lives of a Malay Muslim family from the 1930s to the present.

Karim Raslan is fascinated by what he calls "...the imagined communities of the American West." He believes "Malaysians can reinvent themselves in much the way Americans do: by asserting a new identity that works..."

Raslan is the Senior Partner of Raslan-Loong, a corporate law firm headquartered in Kuala Lumpur, with offices in South Africa and Germany. The firm specializes in banking, corporate finance, capital markets, insolvency, restructuring and information technology work.

Raslan is also an active political analyst and columnist. He is a regular commentator on Asian affairs for both regional and international newspapers, magazines, (including Asiaweek, Far Eastern Economic Review, TIME and Foreign Policy magazine), on television (CNN and CNBC), and radio. He also writes the fortnightly syndicated column "Eye in Asia," published by most major newspapers in Asia and he writes arts reviews in Asian Art News, published from Hong Kong.

Following September 11th, Raslan traveled around the United States on a lecture tour to a number of universities, presenting an address entitled "Kuala Lumpur is Not Kabul: Militants and Tolerance in the Asian Core of the Muslim World." In his talk he drew a distinction between the 235 million Muslims of Southeast Asia (mainly Malays and Indonesians) and those of the Arab states, where he feels more negative feelings about America exist.

Committed to promoting peace and understanding between the Muslim world and the United States, Raslan has repeatedly stressed the need for exchange programs to teach tolerance. "What Washington can and must do," he stresses, "is continue to fund programs like Fulbright to bring Muslim students to the United States. Many of them, after all, will be important voices when they return home." And he says, Muslim "...women must be recruited for Fulbright and other programs." ♦

Over the past three decades, Steve Raymer has journeyed to more than eighty-five countries as a National Geographic staff photographer and a professor of journalism at Indiana University. He joined the staff of National Geographic in 1972, and, in his more than two decades with the magazine, his photos have illustrated stories from famines in Bangladesh to the collapse of the Soviet Union.

From 1999 to 2000, Raymer held a Fulbright Research Fellowship grant at the University of Malaya in Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia. His latest book, Living Faith: Inside the Muslim World of Southeast Asia, documents his work during the grant. Photographs in the book span the region, and the photographs and text take the reader inside mosques and schools, into villages and cities, and among families. No stranger to the Islamic world, Raymer has also photographed Muslims at prayer in all of the kingdoms of the Arabian Gulf, Afghanistan, Iran, Central Asia and Niger in West Africa.

He is also the author and photographer of St. Petersburg, a book about the imperial Russian capital, and is the photographer of Land of the Ascending Dragon: Rediscovering Vietnam and The Vietnamese Cookbook.

Raymer has received many awards, including the National Press Photographers' Association's "Magazine Photographer of the Year"; a citation for excellence in foreign reporting from the Overseas Press Club; and four first-prize awards from the White House News Photographers' Association. In November of 2001, The Freedom Forum and the Newseum named Raymer the "Photojournalist of the Month."

At Indiana University's School of Journalism, Raymer teaches photojournalism, media ethics and international newsgathering. He is also on the faculty of Indiana University's Russian and East European Institute. He has lectured on photojournalism ethics and practice at universities in the United States, Russia, Poland, Malaysia, Singapore, the Philippines, and Vietnam. He earned B.S. and M.A. degrees at the University of Wisconsin-Madison and studied Soviet and Russian affairs at Stanford University as a John S. Knight Journalism Fellow.

In the introduction to his book, Living Faith, Raymer writes, "Going behind the headlines to tell complex stories is the photo essayist's challenge — and never has it been more difficult than in the Muslim world of southeast Asia with all of its fractures and suspicions of non-Muslims like myself. To learn how the Islamic revival has affected ordinary Muslims, I traveled the length of the Malay Peninsula, including the four Muslim-dominated southern provinces of Thailand. I crisscrossed the Indonesian Archipelago and journeyed to Cambodia, Singapore, and Brunei to look at the impact of the Muslim resurgence on schools, villages, high-technology factories, cities, and families. My goal was simple and direct: To put a human face on Islam." ♦

For almost a year beginning in mid-October of 2001, U.S. News and World Report's Beijing Bureau Chief Bay Fang reported from Afghanistan. She covered the war against the Taliban from Northern Alliance controlled territory and from the front lines. For the first few months, she was the only journalist in Afghanistan covering the war for the magazine.

Excerpts from her front-line war diary, which included vivid descriptions of the Afghan people she encountered en route to the Northern Alliance's liberation of Taloqan and the battle for control of Konduz, appeared in the November 26th issue of U.S. News and World Report. She has also written powerful articles covering events in post-Taliban Afghanistan, including chilling survivors' accounts of the March earthquake.

Fang graduated with an honors degree in Social Studies and East Asian Studies from Harvard University in 1995 as a Radcliffe College National Scholar and a Harvard College Scholar. She had also been the editor of Tian, a national Asian-American newspaper. During her time at Harvard, she completed a magna cum laude thesis on China's one child policy.

From 1995 to 1996, she was a U.S Fulbright Fellow in International Relations in Hong Kong. There she researched democratization in Hong Kong and the impact the handover of the country to China would have in 1997. Her studies were based at the Chinese University of Hong Kong.

After completing her Fulbright, she wrote for the Far Eastern Economic Review, a Hong Kong-based newsmagazine, and for the Hong Kong Standard, as a weekly columnist. For the Far Eastern Economic Review she wrote feature articles on farmers filing class action lawsuits, crusading Chinese journalists, and pyramid schemes. In 1998, she became Asia Bureau Chief of U.S. News and World Report, as well as a China Radio Correspondent for CBS News. As a radio stringer, she covered anti-American demonstrations, the Falun Gong crackdown and the Taiwanese election, filing both spot news and feature articles. She has written news and feature stories on such topics as underground Christians and trafficking in children. She was also one of the first Western journalists to write about Falun Gong just before the group staged its April 1999 protest. Before leaving China to report from Afghanistan, she wrote on China's slow response to the growing HIV/AIDS epidemic.

In 1999, Bay Fang received the Robert F. Kennedy Memorial Journalism Award. She was honored with the First Prize in International Print for her article "China's Stolen Wives," which addressed the circumstances of young Chinese women kidnapped and sold into matrimonial slavery and the measures the Chinese authorities were taking to stop trafficking in women. She was also awarded the Livingston Award in 1999 as a finalist for outstanding journalists under age 35. Bay Fang has emerged as a journalist of note and one who follows in the tradition of many other renowned Fulbright alumni journalists. The writings of these journalists change minds and change perceptions and further Senator Fulbright's vision of a world that expands "...the boundaries of human wisdom, empathy and perception...." ♦

Master photographer Wendy Ewald's work proves that photography can be a medium of communication and also one that can be particularly accessible to children. Ewald received a Fulbright grant in 1982 to teach photography to children in rural Colombia. There she explored the composition of story-telling, concluding "the visual and the verbal had to be equal." This is a lesson she learned from Colombian culture; it is one of the paradigms of communication that dominates much of Ewald's work.

For the past thirty years, Ewald has looked to the realm of childhood imagination to explore the relationship between the photographer and the subject in documentary photography. In Colombia, she was able to implement her theories into experimental photography projects. "I wanted my pictures to be more intimate and revealing than the traditional sort of portrait, which often called for a formal distance between the photographer and the subject," she explains, saying that, "the greatest divisions I found between the subjects and the photographer were cultural."

Ewald began turning her camera over to her subjects, directly involving them in the creation of the scene. Her first project with children was in 1969, just after she graduated from high school, teaching photography to children in Naskapi and MicMac native communities in Canada. After completing university studies at Antioch and Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Ewald taught photography and filmmaking to students in Whitesburg, Kentucky from 1976-1980, sponsored by the Kentucky Arts Commission.

Then, in 1982, Ewald was awarded a Fulbright Student Grant and traveled to Raquira, Colombia, bringing her expertise to the native children in the mountainous regions of the country.

"I didn't know the way I had taught photography in Kentucky could be translated to another culture. My idea was that working away from my native language, I would be forced to rely on my visual skills." In Raquira, she was an adopted and active member of the local community, working with rural children on the brink of adolescence, "I shared what might be called the last year of their childhood."

In 1986, she published Magic Eyes: Scenes from an Andean Girlhood, a collaborative work between herself and her Colombian protégés, re-telling the story of a Colombian woman growing up in the region.

The book was enormously popular and exposed various social situations, including poverty and abuse, through the eyes of the area's children. Ewald then spent two years with children in rural Gujarat, India on a similar photography project. She has taught photography to children in Mexico and South Africa as well.

In 1989, Ewald founded the program "Literacy Through Photography" (LTP) in the Durham Public School System in North Carolina, encouraging students to find their voices through photography and written text. The images became a catalyst for subsequent written investigations of self, community, family, and dreams.

Ewald is currently a Senior Researching Associate at the Center for Documentary Studies and an Artist-in-Residence at the John Hope Franklin Center, both at Duke University; a Senior Fellow at the Vera Lost Center for Art and Politics at the New School University, as well as Project Director of LTP. Among her numerous awards are several National Endowment for the Arts grants, a Lila Wallace Readers' Digest Visual Arts Fellowship for South Africa and a MacArthur "Genius" award. ♦

NEW INITIATIVES

A. The Fulbright New Century Scholars Program

An exciting new addition to the historic Fulbright exchanges of educators, professionals, and students is a program for the new millennium entitled The New Century Scholars Program. This innovation is unique in its interdisciplinary approach, its focus on issues of global concern, and its effort to build research teams of scholars from around the globe.

Traditionally, the Fulbright Senior Scholar Program awards grants to outstanding scholars who lecture or do research. Grantees work as individuals, not as members of a team. In contrast, each year the New Century Scholars Program concentrates on a major issue of significance for all humankind. Teams of 30 leading scholars and professionals from around the world are awarded grants to do research in their own disciplines on this theme, while collaborating with one another through meetings and electronic conversations. The grantees meet for an in-depth orientation and discussions about the work that each plans to do at the beginning of the Program, and then again at a culminating two-week plenary conference. Plans call for the research papers produced for the plenary conference to be published.

Threats to health are growing worldwide because of the spread of existing and new diseases, air and water pollution, inadequate nutrition, and population growth. For this reason the theme "The Challenges of Health in a Borderless World" was chosen for 2001, the inaugural year of The New Century Scholars Program. Professor Ilona Kickbusch, chair of the Division of Global Health at the Yale University School of Medicine, was asked to lead the research team.

Professor Kickbusch is an internationally known scholar and research scientist from Germany, with a distinguished career at the World Health Organization in Geneva. She is an advisor to the Pan American Health Organization, the Commission of the European Union, and many foundations and NGOs on global health and health promotion.

Following announcement of the theme, the traditional Fulbright selection process of open competition and merit-based review of applicants by a peer review committee was conducted by the Council for the International Exchange of Scholars (CIES). Twelve American and eighteen foreign scholars were selected to participate in the new research and exchange program. The Americans worked at host institutions in the United Kingdom, South Africa, Ghana, Mongolia, Switzerland, Finland, Chad, Bosnia, Canada, India, Jamaica, Uganda, and Mexico; the foreign participants worked at universities and specialized non-government organizations in 13 states and Washington, DC.

The orientation and goal-setting session for the first New Century Scholars Program was held in Bellagio, Italy for three days at the end of October and early November. This opening session was funded by the Rockefeller Foundation, which also provided the conference facility. The meeting introduced the scholars to each other, allowed them to share their own individual research and perspectives on the theme, and gave them the opportunity to set common objectives. The grantees agreed to relate their individual research to social and economic development on the local and global level, and to consider practical solutions.

The Fulbright Scholarship Board evaluated the New Century Scholars Program at the end of the year and praised administrators from the Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs (ECA) and CIES for their joint efforts to move the Fulbright Program in new directions.

B. The Fulbright Senior Specialist Program

As the demographics of higher education faculty have changed in the past decades, and there has been a growth of two career families, it is increasingly difficult for faculty to leave their home institutions for lengthy periods of time. Policies have been adopted to address this issue. For example, shorter grants, involving a minimum of three months teaching abroad, are now available.

In 2001, the Fulbright Scholarship Board voted to approve a pilot program proposed by CIES to meet specific needs of universities in our partner countries, to compress and simplify the application process for grants, and to make it possible for faculty to go on short-term assignments of two to six weeks. Applicants apply throughout the calendar year to be listed on a Senior Specialist Roster. Candidates are vetted by a peer review process akin to the selection process for traditional Fulbright grants.

Overseas institutions submit requests throughout the academic year via the binational Commissions or U.S. Embassies, and CIES matches senior scholars on the roster with requests from abroad.

Because of its flexibility, the new Program has been very popular. By the end of 2001, the roster of specialists included nearly 400 candidates, a third of whom were full professors, including deans, department chairs, and distinguished professors with 30 or more years of teaching experience. By the end of the calendar year, 175 requests had come in from 46 countries and 52 grants were made in 15 disciplines. ECA estimates, based on projected budget levels, that 220 grants will be made at an average cost of $5,700 in 2002.

and Embassy officials has been uniformly positive. For example, one professor said: “You return with renewed belief that international people-to-people programs are the best route to global understanding and the peace we so very desperately need now.” Another said: “For someone who grew up in small town America, to be given this opportunity has been incredible for personal growth and awareness, and I will continue to share my experiences with my students and others.”

C. The Alumni Initiative Award Program

Fulbright educational exchanges frequently lead to lasting friendships, greater understanding by grantees, their students and colleagues at the host university, and collaboration on many worthwhile projects. Yet it has been difficult for American and foreign scholars to keep the momentum going once they return to their own countries. Therefore a pilot program of small awards to recent alumni was initiated in 2000 and 2001.

The goal of the alumni awards is to add value to the basic fellowship experience by providing seed money for the development of innovative projects between the Fulbright scholar’s home and host institutions. Funding for the initiative comes from the Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs and the Fulbright Legacy Fund — a private endowment established by the Institute of International Education (IIE).

The pilot program limited eligibility to Americans who held Fulbrights from 1995 to 1999. Information was distributed to the academic community primarily by electronic means. Five hundred fifty alumni applied, and 24 grants were made, ranging from $1,650 to $20,000.

The first year both foreign and American scholars were eligible was 2001. Nineteen Americans and 11 foreign scholars received grants. The foreign scholar award recipients were based in Chile, China, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Nepal and South Africa, and used their awards for curriculum development, distance learning, collaborative research, summer institutes and additional exchanges.

The 19 American grantees came from a diverse group of public and private colleges and universities in 15 states. Their projects linked their home institutions with universities in Argentina, Austria, Belarus, Botswana, China, France, Germany, India, Jordan, Mexico, Romania, Russia, South Africa, Tanzania, Thailand, Venezuela, and the West Bank. Four of the grants increased distance learning between faculty and students on different continents, six were in education, three in ecology, and the others were in development, nursing, public health, biotechnology, psychology and communications, and human rights.

D. The Western Hemisphere Environmental Initiative

In 2001, for the first time, the Organization of American States (OAS) and the Department of State’s Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs joined to launch a Fulbright Program to address the growing need for environmental scientists and policymakers in the Americas. At the ceremony announcing the new initiative, officials spoke of the importance of the agreement as a way to address economic inequity and the resulting pressures that lead to environmental problems.

Participants in the Fulbright Ecology program gather at LASPAU for a workshop on Sustainable Development in Latin America and the Caribbean, on June 15th. The Harvard workshop was preceded by a five-week on-line seminar.

The Fulbright-OAS Ecology Initiative will offer 20 grants per year to individuals from research centers, academic institutions, and nongovernmental organizations throughout Latin America, the Caribbean, and Canada for interdisciplinary environmental study at the master’s and doctoral level at American universities.

LASPAU: Academic and Professional Programs for the Americas, administers the new ecology program. Students from Colombia, Haiti, Argentina, Ecuador, Bolivia, Chile, Mexico, Peru, Jamaica, Guatemala, Panama, Paraguay, and Venezuela were selected from over 100 applicants for the first grants.

The new program emerged from the Amazon Basin Scholarship Program and the Caribbean and Central American Ecology Program, both launched in 1991 by the Fulbright Program, the Ford Foundation, and the Charles Stewart Mott Foundation. These pilot programs, although circumscribed geographically, were extremely successful and helped lead to a program with the potential for greater impact throughout the region.

E. The American Political Science Association Congressional Fellows Initiative

During 2001, the Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs and the American Political Science Association established Fulbright/APSA Congressional Fellowships for foreign scholars. These new fellowships will enable scholars from abroad to conduct research on the U.S. federal government while working as staff members in congressional offices. The first three grantees come from Jordan, Mexico, and Poland.

HIGHLIGHTS OF 2001 IN THE UNITED STATES

THE FULBRIGHT ASSOCIATION

The Fulbright Association awarded the 2001 J. William Fulbright Prize for International Understanding to U.N. Secretary General Kofi Annan at the Library of Congress on December 3, 2001 shortly before he received the Nobel Peace Prize in Stockholm. The Fulbright Prize, awarded annually to a distinguished international leader, recognizes individuals who have made outstanding contributions to breaking through the barriers which divide humanity.

In his acceptance speech, Secretary General Annan said:

"I am particularly pleased to receive an award named after J. William Fulbright, a visionary statesman and supporter of the United Nations. The Fulbright Exchange Program is a model for the kind of dialogue among cultures and civilizations that the U.N. has been promoting around the world. Today, perhaps more than ever, international understanding is essential to world peace — understanding between faiths, between nations, between cultures."

Fulbright Prize Winner U.N. Secretary General Kofi Annan joins the Assistant Secretary of State for Educational and Cultural Affairs Patricia S. Harrison and Douglas N. Daft, Chairman and CEO of the Coca Cola Company and supporter of the Fulbright Prize, and on the far right Charles H. Harff, the 2001 President of the Fulbright Association.

In 2001, nearly one thousand students and scholars from 140 countries met with influential Americans from diverse sectors of the nation at these enrichment seminars.

Seminars were held in Chicago, Denver, Miami, New Orleans, San Francisco, New York, and Washington, DC for student grantees on such topics as the political and economic implications of the national census, Restoring the City Environment, and Mosaic or Melting Pot: Cultural Identity in a Diverse Society. At each seminar, senior government officials, Republican and Democratic leaders, congressional staff, and interest group representatives spoke.

Earlier in the fall, the 24th annual conference of the Fulbright Association explored the topic "Transforming Transitions: A Fulbright Perspective." Panels on the Digital Divide, Art as Ambassador, and Shaping Civil Society were featured.

Seminars for Foreign Fulbrighters

As in past years, the Fulbright Program sponsored three-day enrichment seminars on important issues in America for students and research scholars currently on exchange in the United States. The seminars are an integral part of the Fulbright experience, and are designed to support the objective of promoting mutual understanding by focusing on critical issues in U.S. society which have global resonance.

HIGHLIGHTS OF 2001 IN THE UNITED STATES

Fulbright Commission Staff Conference in Washington

Representatives from 50 of the 51 binational Commissions met in Washington in June for a five-day conference on administration of the Fulbright Program. Program managers from the Commission countries, plus Russia, the Ukraine, and Vietnam, and staff from the non-profit cooperating agencies which administer the Fulbright Program discussed all aspects of running a complex multi-country educational exchange activity, highlighted best practices, studied recent technological innovations, administrative operations, and financial management, and upgraded their professional skills.

Competition to Administer the Fulbright Student Program

In 2001, at the request of Congress, ECA conducted a competition for the cooperative agreement to administer the Fulbright Student Program in 2001. Proposals from competing organizations underwent three stages of review. A panel of experienced Executive Directors of Fulbright Commissions was asked to evaluate the proposals, followed by an evaluation by a private sector panel of senior U.S. academics and, finally, an analysis was made by a State Department senior management team.

The review panels recommended that the cooperative agreement be awarded for the U.S. Student Program to the Institute of International Education in New York City and for the Foreign Student Program to IIE, AMIDEAST in Washington, D.C. for portions of the program, and with LASPAU of Boston becoming a subcontractor of IIE for other parts of the program. The Assistant Secretary of State, authorized to make the final decision, agreed with the recommendation and approved the grant awards. While the Fulbright Student Program continues to be administered by the same partners after the competition, ECA staff and the Fulbright Scholarship Board concluded the competition generated many fresh ideas and new energy.

Changes at the Department of State

Early in the year, the White House nominated Ms. Charlotte L. Beers to be the Under Secretary of State for Public Diplomacy and Public Affairs. She was confirmed by the Senate after Congress reconvened in September. She has had vast experience and a path-breaking career in public relations and advertising, including posts as chairman of J. Walter Thompson and CEO of Ogilvy and Mather.

President Bush nominated Ms. Patricia S. Harrison to serve as Assistant Secretary of State for Educational and Cultural Affairs. She was sworn in by Secretary of State Colin Powell on October 31, 2001. Ms. Harrison is an entrepreneur, author, and political leader, who served as Co-Chairman of the Republican National Committee and was a founding partner of the public affairs firm E. Bruce Harrison Company. Appointed by President Bush (1990) to the President's Export Council, U.S. Department of Commerce, she served on the Executive Committee and strengthened export promotion programs on behalf of U.S. business. She also chaired the International Committee, Small Business Advisory Council, Small Business Administration, and was appointed in 1992 to the United States Trade Representative's Service Policy Advisory Council. Ms. Harrison, a former Visiting Fellow at the Annenberg Public Policy Center of the University of Pennsylvania, is a champion of career and economic opportunities for women and has worked to identify women and minorities for leadership roles in business and politics.

Change and Continuity at the Fulbright Scholarship Board in 2001

The Fulbright Scholarship Board, charged by Congress to establish the policies of the Fulbright Program and to give final approval to all grants, pursued a busy schedule in 2001. The Board participated actively in the development of the new initiatives described above and monitored the competition to administer the Fulbright Student Program.

Substantial time and effort was put into the expensive and Herculean task of developing a database of the alumni of the Fulbright Program both in the U.S. and abroad. Members of the Board believe that contact with Fulbrighters can add substantially to the benefits of educational exchanges. The effort to create such a database started in 1995 and, while some progress has been made, the project stalled in 2001 and is unlikely to be completed in 2002, primarily due to lack of resources. The value of such a database became clearer after September 11, and therefore the Board advocated strongly for the Department to develop a greater capability with the database.

The Board did complete work on two important publications. The first of these, a top to bottom revision of the rules and regulations of the Fulbright Program, entitled The Policies of the J. William Fulbright Foreign Scholarship Board, was three years in the making. The revision was a collaborative effort of Board members, professional staff at the Bureau, representatives of Fulbright Commissions, and individuals from the cooperating organizations that help to administer the Program.

The Board also completed and published A Guide to the Fulbright Program. The Board had determined that a straightforward, easy to read pamphlet in a question and answer format was needed to explain the Fulbright Program to interested individuals around the world. The Program is far more complex than other scholarship programs since it is administered by the U.S. Government in partnership with 140 foreign governments, 51 bi-national Commissions abroad, private non-governmental organizations, academic institutions, and the private sector.

At the final meeting of the Fulbright Scholarship Board in December, Chairman Alan Schechter completed his three-year term as Chair of the Board, and Vice Chair Caroline A. Matano Yang was elected to replace him. Board Member Victoria McCammon Murphy was elected Vice Chair. Pat Kern Schaefer, whose professional background includes a great deal of experience working in various parts of the Fulbright Program, replaced Elizabeth Nyhus as the Staff Director of the Board.

Board members Senator John Culver of Washington, DC, Huel Perkins of Louisiana, William Mauk of Florida, and Jane Siena of Washington completed their terms of service on the Fulbright Board. In November of 2001, President Bush announced the appointment of four new members of the Board. These new members are Mr. John W. Johnson, Chairman, Permian Mud Service, Inc. of Houston, Texas; Mrs. Jan D. O’Neil, of Midland, Texas; attorney Mr. Steven J. Uhlfelder of Tallahassee, Florida; and Mr. Donald E. Vermeil, Principal, Renco Properties, Inc. of Palo Alto, California.

The Board ended the year by unanimously voting to send a letter to Secretary of State Colin Powell strongly urging greater support for the Fulbright Program at this historical moment. The letter said, in part, “The Fulbright Program is the brightest star in our public diplomacy efforts, yet it is starved for funds. We could easily double the numbers worldwide if we had the resources to do so. The infrastructure, personnel, and procedures are in place to carry out this mission. Bold action is necessary if we are to strengthen meaningfully our public diplomacy programs....” ♦

HIGHLIGHTS OF THE FULBRIGHT PROGRAM ABROAD

NORTH AFRICA, THE MIDDLE EAST AND SOUTH ASIA

The highlight of 2001 in Egypt was a recital of international and American music by three Egyptian alumni in early November. The concertmaster of the Cairo Symphony, Yasser El Serafy, Soprano Dalia Farouk of the Cairo Opera House, and pianist Wael Farouk performed for an audience, which included the U.S. Ambassador, diplomats from a number of countries, members of the Commission and prominent Egyptians. At the recital, the Executive Director of the Commission and the Ambassador stressed the importance of international education and the role of the Fulbright Program, especially after September 11. Nile TV taped the recital, and all major Arabic language newspapers covered the event.

The United States Educational Foundation in India sponsored numerous seminars and conferences throughout the country in 2001. Some examples include: a roundtable on Community Responsive Legal Education; a conference on Gender, Social Paradigms, and Comedy on the Tamil Popular Stage; a training program for information professionals, librarians, and archivists on digital libraries; and a seminar for philosophers on Epistemology.

Dr. Vijaya Khandavilli Rao, Educational Advisor of USEFI-Delhi, gives a presentation of the Educational advising Services available in Delhi, India. At far right is Board Chair Alan Schechter.

Commission staff played a role in the 34th annual conference of the Indian Association for American Studies. American and Indian Fulbrighters also played an active role in all of these meetings.

In addition, the Foundation launched a series of six South Asian Regional Roundtables featuring Fulbrighters from Bangladesh, India, Nepal, Pakistan, and Sri Lanka. The first roundtable focused on “Teaching of International Relations in South Asia.” The goal of the roundtables is to increase discussions and encourage cooperation among professionals in the same discipline from various countries in the region.

An Iraqi expatriate Fulbrighter, Professor Muhsin Jassim al-Musawi, was awarded the $100,000 Al Owais Prize for Arabic Literature and Criticism for 2001. Al-Musawi is currently professor of Arabic and Comparative Studies at the American University of Sharjah in the United Arab Emirates (UAE). He played a leading role in Iraqi literary and cultural life in the 1980s as Director General of Cultural Books and Journals, professor at Baghdad University, and as a prolific literary critic. Since the early 1990s, when he went into exile, he has taught in Jordan, Yemen, and Tunisia.

Four Israeli alumni of the Fulbright Program were awarded Israel’s highest civilian award, the Israel Prize, at a formal ceremony on Israel’s Independence Day attended by Israel’s President, Prime Minister, and chief of the Supreme Court. Two were cited for their contributions in education, one in philosophy, and the fourth in law. An American alumnus who was affiliated with the Weizmann Institute during his Fulbright in Israel, Dr. Alan Leshner, was appointed CEO of the American Association for the Advancement of Science. Previously, Dr. Leshner had headed the National Institute of Drug Abuse and served as Deputy Director of the National Institute of Mental Health.

The Commission in Jordan continues to play a vital role in higher educational exchanges by strengthening academic, institution-to-institution bridges with the United States. In 2001, the University of Jordan established an American Studies Master’s Degree Program — the first such degree program in the Middle East/North Africa. Fulbright scholars were instrumental in designing and teaching core subjects.

Support for the Fulbright Program is noteworthy in Morocco. A Fulbright Business Advisory Council, co-chaired by the U.S. Ambassador, the governor of Rabat, and a former Minister of Finance, includes 40 leading Moroccan and American executives. Since 1998 the Advisory Council has funded 11 hyphenated Fulbright grants, raised nearly a million dollars, and established the Mohammed VI Moroccan-American Scholarship Endowment Fund. The Mohammed VI grants emphasize conflict resolution, governance, and development.

Scholars Meriem El Harrouchi (left) and Amina Zougari are the first students to receive the new Hassam II Memorial Fulbright Grant, for Moroccan students wishing to pursue Master's or Ph.D. studies in the United States, in the fields of international relations, conflict resolution, civic education or public administration. Harrouchi is enrolled in a Masters program in International Relations at The Johns Hopkins University, in Baltimore, MD and Zougari has begun her Master's in International Development at Fordham University in New York City.

Sixteen American educators participated in a six-week Fulbright-Hays Seminar Abroad sponsored by the U.S. Department of Education entitled "Challenges of Globalization in Morocco and Tunisia." Seven Moroccan teachers traveled to the United States for six-week exchanges, which focused on approaches to teaching English. While in the United States they also discussed Islam in visits to American schools.

A major celebration had been planned for the 40th Anniversary of the Fulbright Program in Nepal on June 7, 2001, but the massacre of the royal family several days earlier caused the celebration to be cancelled. More than 400 alumni of the Fulbright, Humphrey, and East-West Center programs, as well as educators and government officials, had hoped to attend. The anniversary was subsequently noted at a more subdued reception later in the year. Executive Director Michael Gill was honored for outstanding contributions to the environment in Nepal by facilitating exchanges in science and natural resource management.

Earlier in the year, 53 South Asian alumni of the Hubert H. Humphrey Fellowship Program met in Kathmandu to discuss governance issues in South Asia. At the conference, delegates from Pakistan worked closely with colleagues from India, despite the tensions between the two countries.

Educational resources in Nepal have grown exponentially as a result of the work of Senior Scholar Al Rosenbloom, an associate professor of marketing in the business school of Benedictine University in Lisle, Illinois. While teaching at the School of Management of Kathmandu University, Professor Rosenbloom helped the school download the complete library of teaching materials from Harvard Business School and a number of other business schools. In addition, the marketing journals of the American Marketing Association will now be available in the library of Kathmandu University.

Dr. Issa El-Hussain, an American Fulbrighter at Sultan Qaboos University in Oman, was a guest speaker at a dinner highlighting religious tolerance in America organized by the U.S. Embassy in early December. El-Hussain talked about his life as a devout Muslim raising a family of five in Missouri. Guests also viewed photographic exhibits on "Islam in America" and "Discover Islam." The presentations were designed to demonstrate the presence of Islam in modern America.

During the year, two Fulbright alumni from Oman were honored with appointments to major positions in higher education. Sultan Qaboos University promoted Dr. Saleh Bin Mohammed Al Alawi to Dean of the College of Commerce and Economics and Dr. Samira Bin Mohammed Moosa to Assistant to the Vice President of the College of Science and the Humanities.

Nancy Ahson stepped into an extremely difficult job when she became the Executive Director of the United States Educational Foundation in Pakistan in September. She knew the region well and had been serving as the Community Liaison Officer at the U.S. Embassy in Islamabad for two years when she accepted the Fulbright post. Her professional background includes ten years as Assistant Director of Institutional Assessment at George Mason University in Virginia and she has written and presented many papers on assessing and improving educational quality at the university level. As unrest mounted in the fall, the American component of the Program in Pakistan was suspended, and Ms. Ahson was evacuated twice. She is continuing to manage the Fulbright Program for Pakistanis from an office outside the country.

Professor David Commins became the first American scholar affiliated with the King Faisal Center for Research and Islamic Studies in Saudi Arabia, where he conducted research on 19th century Arabian history. The Embassy and the Saudi government are eager to have more Fulbright scholars doing research in Islamic Studies at the Center in Riyadh.

U.S. Senior Scholar and prominent expert on sea turtles Dr. Ibrahim Mahmoud lectured at the First Saudi Conference on Science Education at King Fahd University, met with Saudi environmentalists, spoke to the Natural History Society and the National Commission for Wildlife Conservation, and gave television, radio, and newspaper interviews on the responsibility of the Gulf countries to protect endangered species.

Humphrey Fellows from 11 countries attended a regional workshop on drug abuse in Sri Lanka. The goal of the conference was to discuss developments in treatment, prevention, enforcement, and education, as well as to exchange experiences and strengthen professional ties.

The Watertown Times, an upstate New York regional newspaper, ran an article by Potsdam State University professor Anthony Boyle, a Fulbright scholar in Syria. Boyle described his assignment in Syria positively, stating that his students are "...alert and patient, charming, considerate, and eager to learn." In his encounters with Syrians, he found only praise for the people of the United States and the achievements of its society. Since his return to the United States, he has worked to dispel some of the erroneous ideas that Americans have about the Middle East and people in the region.

EAST ASIA AND THE PACIFIC

In February, the Australian Fulbright Commission achieved a milestone when its new offices in Canberra were officially opened by the Minister of Education and the American Ambassador. Both speakers focused on the historical and contemporary importance of the Fulbright Program in promoting Australian-American relationships. The new facility was jointly funded by the two governments. A new Advisory Board of prominent business leaders was established to support the Fulbright Program and increase its profile. And, new grants were created by both governments in honor of the 50th anniversary of the ANZUS Treaty.

The Australian-American Fulbright Commission opened its new office building on February 15th. Present on landing, third from left, is U.S. Ambassador Edward Gnehm.

The Fulbright Alumni Association of Cambodia was officially launched at a ceremony in Phnom Penh in November 2001, indicating the extent to which educational exchanges are now part of normal relations between the two countries. No exchanges took place from 1974-1994 because of the civil war and the Khmer Rouge's regime. The Program was revived seven years ago, and it has flourished since then. Fulbright alumni now hold many influential positions in the government, international organizations, and the private sector.

An American Fulbright scholar, Eric Harwit of the University of Hawaii, did research on telecommunications during his grant to China, and is publishing articles on this important topic. Use of the Internet is growing rapidly in China, and is already having a substantial impact on the economy and society generally. In addition, two American Fulbright lecturers in Beijing discussed U.S. actions and world events on Chinese television and at universities in the weeks following the terrorist attacks of September 11.

U.S. Consul General to Hong Kong Michael Klosson and Hong Kong Research Grants Council Chairman Professor Kenneth Young announced the award of fellowships to the first four Hong Kong scholars selected for the new "Fulbright Hong Kong Scholar Program" on March 26th. Pictured in the photograph, from left to right are, Dr. Glenn Shive, Director, Hong Kong-America Center; Mr. Lloyd Neighbors, Counselor for Public Affairs, U.S. Embassy, Beijing; Research Grants Council Chairman Dr.

Dr. Jiatong Zhuo, who spent a year at Emory University as a Humphrey Fellow, has published the first Chinese-language training manual on AIDS/Sexually Transmitted Infections to be distributed free in China to health professionals engaged in recognition, screening, counseling, and treatment.

Tsinghua University School of Law in Beijing and Franklin Pierce Law Center in New Hampshire have used the Fulbright Institutional Partnership Program to create a summer study program in intellectual property rights in China. The faculty includes two American and Chinese scholars who are Fulbright alumni.

A new initiative of the Fulbright Program in Hong Kong will enable more scholars to do research in the United States. The Hong Kong government-funded Research Grants Council has contributed $250,000 for a three-year pilot project to provide awards to four senior scholars annually in education, health care, history, and architecture.

The Indonesia Fulbright Commission is focusing heavily on programs on resolving conflicts in the country by democratic means. Over 120 of the nation's senior political leaders, media executives, educators, religious leaders, and NGO directors attended a day-long seminar on "Making Democracy Work" and the annual orientation of new Fulbright grantees before their departure to the United States. An American Fulbright Scholar from City College of New York who is teaching at the Jakarta Institute of Government Studies, has been engaged in discussions about creating a new constitution, and has suggested in Indonesian newspapers using the U.S. constitutional convention as a model.

Elsewhere in the country, a Fulbright Professor from Temple University has launched Indonesia's first graduate-level comparative religion program. For the first time, graduate students in religion must study another religion in addition to Islam. The goal is to produce instructors who will teach comparative religion at the university and secondary level. Ms. Sumita Tobing, who earned her M.A. in mass communications on a Fulbright grant, has been appointed the new director of Indonesia's National Television Station.

On the Island of Bali, a Humphrey Alumnus, Ida Bagus Wijana, raised the rupiah equivalent of $90,000 to build a cultural center. Mr. Wijana was inspired by the spirit of volunteerism he observed while studying community development at Colorado State University. At the dedication ceremony, the U.S. Ambassador noted that educational and cultural exchanges such as the Humphrey and Fulbright Programs were probably the most important means that the U.S. Government had to enhance democracy and promote mutual understanding between America and other countries.

The Japan-United States Educational [Fulbright] Commission spent much of the year planning for the celebration of the 50th anniversary of the Program in 2002. A series of public lectures by prominent Japanese Fulbright alumni served as a warm-up to the anniversary. The biggest news for 2001 was the initiation of a new funding source that resulted in 10 additional grants for Americans. Funding came from the "A50" project, a major private sector initiative in Japan to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the U.S.-Japan Peace Treaty. Donors to the project hope to raise enough money to continue funding 10 grants a year through 2005.

Fulbright in Korea is now larger than it was at any time prior to the Asian financial crisis. The Fulbright Commission there awarded grants to 118 individuals in 2001, and the Korean government has announced its intention to increase its financial contribution to the Program. The English Teaching Assistant Program (ETA), which brings recent American college graduates to Korea to teach English in secondary schools and to live in Korean families, has been lauded by the Korean Ministry of Education, and has created a cadre of Americans with in-depth experience of the country.

The Fulbright Commission in Malaysia co-sponsored with the Fulbright and Humphrey Alumni Associations workshops in Kuala Lumpur after September 11 conducted by Fulbright alumnus Steve Raymer for religious leaders, journalists, lawyers, and academics. Raymer spent three years researching and photographing for his book Living Faith. The chairman of the Malaysian Institute for Islamic Understanding praised the book for portraying Islam as a religion of peace and inclusiveness, and commended the Embassy and Fulbright Commission for bringing people of all faiths together during a period of international tension.

During the year, Dr. Donald McCloud, became the Executive Director of the Commission in Malaysia. Previously, Professor McCloud held various staff positions for 25 years at the Midwest Universities Consortium for International Activities (MUCIA) and taught Southeast Asian Studies at The Ohio State University. MUCIA is an organization of 10 major Midwestern universities which manages educational development and institution building in higher education in Southeast Asia and elsewhere in the world. McCloud taught in Indonesia on a Fulbright grant in 1971, and has also been a visiting professor in Taiwan. He is the author of many books and articles on Southeast Asia.

Executive Director Jenny Gill and her staff from the New Zealand Fulbright Commission organized the 2001 Fulbright East Asia Pacific Regional Conference on the subject of "Fulbright in the 21st Century: Looking Toward the Future." The conference attracted delegates and staff from Fulbright Commissions, Embassies and posts, the Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs, IIE and CIES. Board member Victoria Murphy and Deputy Staff Director Lesley Vossen represented the Fulbright Scholarship Board. Three retreats were held: for Executive Directors, for Public Affairs Officers, and for program officers. A panel of American grantees and New Zealand alumni discussed the impact of the Program; other speakers focused on innovation, best practices, the implications of information technology, and educational advising. The broad mix of attendees created exceptional learning opportunities and renewed enthusiasm for the Fulbright Program.

Two American Fulbrighters in the performing arts enriched cultural opportunities in Taiwan. Micki Selvitella, from Portland Center Stage, lectured in theater arts at National Taiwan University and directed students in multiple performances of Bertolt Brecht's Caucasian Chalk Circle, which played to sold-out audiences. A flautist from East Carolina University, Dr. Christine Gustafson, who was affiliated with the Chiang Kai-Shek Cultural Center, gave performances and taught master classes in northern and central Taiwan.

The stock exchange of Thailand will sponsor seven Fulbright scholarships for Thai Master's Degree students in computer science, finance, marketing and securities law. The Baum Wessel Harris Trio gave a virtuoso performance as part of the State Department's Jazz Ambassadors program at a reception and banquet hosted by the U.S. Ambassador honoring the outgoing chairman of the Thailand-United States Educational Foundation Board, Ambassador Vitthya Vejajiva, and his successor, Ambassador Nitya Pibulsonggram.

In Vietnam, 25 grantees, selected from among 600 applicants for grants to the United States were honored at a three-day orientation in Ho Chi Minh City. One grantee from a rural, poor background stressed the impact on him when he learned that Fulbrighters were selected without regard to race, religion, gender, affiliation, and connections. One returning Vietnamese Fulbrighter stated "My life has changed completely," and another said "I learned so many things and am eager to apply them all to Vietnam."

EUROPE

In Austria, the Austrian-American Commission notes that 2001 was the inaugural year of two new Fulbright Distinguished Chairs, one in international business at the Johannes Kepler University in Linz and the other in gender studies at the University of Klagenfurt. Four Distinguished Chairs had previously been established with co-financing by universities in Vienna, Graz, Salzburg, and Innsbruck. The Commission also negotiated a five-year grant to establish a Distinguished Chair for Entrepreneurship in Central Europe, which will "float" among countries in the region, starting with Hungary in 2003.

The importance of the Fulbright Program in Croatia was recognized by President Stipe Mesic during a visit to the presidential palace in Zagreb by current Fulbright scholars, students, and English Language Fellows. President Stipe emphasized that American grantees are lecturing, studying, and doing research at every university in the country. His advisor for Science and Education is a former Fulbright grantee and president of the Croatian Alumni Association.

Fulbright Board Chairman Alan Schechter (r.) with Ambassador Staur of the Danish Ministry of Foreign Affairs. Staur hosted the Danish-American Fulbright Commission Anniversary seminar.

During 2001, the Fulbright Commission in Cyprus shifted its focus to social problems, and concentrated on short-term workshops for intensive care nurses. The workshops were conducted by Spalding University of Kentucky. In addition, the Commission and U.S. Embassy sponsored summer camp programs for 108 Greek and Turkish Cypriot teenagers in the United States. It was the first time that most of the teenagers had met individuals from the other Cypriot community. There are few places in Cyprus where students from both communities are allowed to meet together.

The Cyprus Fulbright Commission also hosted a regional conference in Nicosia for over 200 professionals in the field of educational exchange from Europe, the NIS, and Israel. Fulbright Commission Executive Directors, educational advisors, representatives from international educational organizations and spokesmen for U.S. colleges and universities participated.

Activities of the Fulbright Commission in the Czech Republic included renegotiation of the existing Fulbright agreement with the United States. The advising service for Czech students interested in studying at American universities was fully updated, with an automatic voice system, expanded web pages, more weekly seminars and outreach activities.

The 50th Anniversary of the Fulbright Program in Denmark was celebrated in Copenhagen with a major symposium entitled "Reporting the USA: How Do We Interpret Contemporary Society, Culture, and Politics." Over 150 Fulbright alumni, university professors and administrators, representatives of the U.S. Embassy and Danish Government, and other prominent Danes attended. Chairman Alan Schechter represented the Fulbright Scholarship Board at the anniversary.

Since the event took place in November, major attention was given during the day to re-interpreting international relations after September 11, to assessing resentment of America abroad and to analyzing responses in the United States and abroad to the attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon. Following the symposium, there was a gala reception and dinner at the official residence of the U.S. Ambassador.

Danish Fulbright Commission Vice Chairman Henrik Stenbjerre spoke movingly about the Marshall Plan and the Fulbright Program, and the impact these two American programs have had on countries like Denmark. His comments were greeted with sustained applause.

The binational Fulbright Commission in Finland developed its first comprehensive strategic plan in 2001, and all Commission activities are now aligned with the plan. Also, the Commission moved to a new Fulbright Center in Helsinki. At the dedication of the Center, the Finnish Minister of Culture emphasized that the Fulbright Program has helped to shape the destiny of her country. Close to 3,000 Finnish and 1,000 American grantees have shared Fulbright experiences as academic ambassadors to each other's countries. Another event in 2001 was the successful conclusion of discussions with Citigroup Foundation in Helsinki to fund a scholarship for a Finnish graduate student in health science.

A Fulbright Alumni Association has been started in France. The Commission has begun an electronic newsletter, redesigned its website, and instituted on-line applications for French students and scholars. In addition, the Commission has signed an agreement with the Aquitaine Regional Council, which will sponsor American scholars in wine growing, biology, and laser technology. In France, regional councils are playing a greater role in higher education, research, and international academic exchanges, and the agreement will both serve as a model and raise the profile of the Fulbright Program outside of Paris.

The German-American Fulbright Commission, under the leadership of the newly-appointed Executive Director Georg Schuette, was very busy during 2001 planning activities to take place during the 50th Anniversary celebration in 2002. Highlights of the year included an award ceremony hosted by the Amerika Haus Frankfurt during one of the orientation meetings for new grantees. There was also intense media coverage of Jonathan Franzen, who won the National Book Award for Fiction and who was a Fulbright Fellow in Germany in the '80s.

Prior to joining the Fulbright Commission, Dr. Schuette was the director of strategic planning and external relations at the prestigious Alexander von Humboldt Foundation for three years. Earlier in his career he was an assistant professor at Siegen University, a freelance correspondent for several prominent German newspapers, and the director of a program at the Humboldt Foundation. He was a Fulbright grantee at the City College of New York, where he earned a Master's Degree in Television and Radio. He has also held a visiting fellowship at Harvard University.

The Aegean Initiative, an innovative effort to encourage cooperation between Greece and Turkey, was launched in 2001. Scholars from both countries are working on cross-border collaboration and tourism at the University of Iowa and on Environmental Education and Cultural Understanding at a nonprofit organization in Boston. American scholars were given regional grants to lecture in both countries on disaster management and emergency preparation and on a bilateral approach to pollution prevention and hazardous waste management.

The Fulbright Foundation in Greece honored the Lilian Voudouris Foundation at its annual recognition dinner for its support of Fulbright exchanges. The Foundation's annual contribution of $50,000 is dedicated to bringing American scholars to learn about modern Greece and to return home as ambassadors of mutual understanding. To date, nine American scholars have received these Fulbright grants. The former treasurer of the Foundation, Thomas Miller, has returned to Greece as the new American Ambassador.

During the year, the dean of Fulbright Executive Directors, William Ammerman, retired after 20 years from the U.S. Educational Foundation in Greece and was replaced by Artemis Zenetou. Ms. Zenetou has had a distinguished career in arts management, including positions as Director/Curator of the World Bank Art Department, Manager of Cultural Programs for the White House, Manager/Curator of Museum Programs at the Smithsonian Institution, and others. She has administered and coordinated many museum programs in the United States and abroad, and has worked closely with, among others, the Greek Ministry of Culture, the Archaeological Museum of Athens and the National Gallery of Greece.

Ms. Lara Jonsdottir was appointed the new Executive Director of the Fulbright Commission in Iceland. Before joining the Commission, she was a teacher, a youth counselor at the Red Cross House in Reykjavik, and manager of Public Relations for the Red Cross House. She has a degree in education from the Icelandic Teachers Training College and an M.S. in Rehabilitation Counseling from San Diego State University. Besides Icelandic and English, she is fluent in Danish, Swedish, and Italian.

HIGHLIGHTS OF THE FULBRIGHT PROGRAM ABROAD

In November, Ireland appointed its first full-time Executive Director, Ms. Carmel Coyle, marking the first phase in establishing the Fulbright Office as a stand-alone operation, independent of the Department of Foreign Affairs, since the Program started in 1957. The Irish government continues to provide office space and administrative support, and has pledged over one million dollars to the Commission for the next five years. Before joining the Commission, Ms. Coyle was most recently Research Administrator at the Institute for British-Irish Studies at University College Dublin, an institute she single-handedly set up in 1999. She has extensive experience in the Irish civil service and various Irish universities, and has published widely in such fields as local government in Ireland, public administration, and education.

Private sector fund-raising by the Commission in Italy led to the creation of three new Fulbright scholarships for young Italians in fields as diverse as multimedia audio-visual technology, economic development, and film direction, as well as a new chair in environmental studies at the Polytechnic of Turin. Efforts to expand educational advising services for Italians interested in studying in the United States, and to raise the profile of the Fulbright Program, led to the establishment of Fulbright desks at five additional universities throughout Italy.

The Lane Kirkland Scholarship Program, named in honor of the late American labor union leader, has awarded scholarships to 30 students from the Ukraine, Belarus, Lithuania, the Kaliningrad region of Russia, and Slovakia to do postgraduate work in Poland. This innovative effort by the Fulbright Commission in Warsaw, using guidelines and eligibility criteria patterned on the Fulbright Program, aims to develop leaders dedicated to democracy, market economics, and civil society in eastern European countries.

The Executive Director and Program Coordinator of the Fulbright Commission in Portugal devoted substantial time and effort to raising the profile of the Program in Portugal and expanding the availability of information on educational opportunities in the United States. Six universities were visited to provide information on Fulbright grants and to meet with alumni who are working at these institutions. In addition, a new information center was opened to improve educational advising services and testing for Portuguese students.

The people of Romania reacted strongly to the September 11 attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon. September 14 was declared a national day of mourning, and two prominent political analysts who are both Fulbright alumni wrote powerful comments in the Romanian press. Fulbright scholars, representatives of the Ministry of Education and Research and the Romanian Institute of Education Sciences, joined Embassy staff in a forum on the impact of international education on the Romanian education system.

Spanish language teaching assistants will be placed in American liberal arts colleges by the Fulbright Commission in Spain. Ten recent university graduates have been selected in the first year of this new program. Also, the Spanish Ministry of Education, Culture, and Sports has increased its support for the Visiting Scholar Program and the Fulbright Study in the Arts Program. In Catalonia, the regional administration has created new grants for both Spanish and American scholars.

The aim was to open young students' minds towards a sense of belonging, empathy, identity, and diversity. The starting point was a Native American story. The result was a collective composition (collage on large canvas): "Putting Our Faces Into Tomorrow's World." The workshop is a component of Lapid's Fulbright project in the field of Arts Education.

In Turkey, the Fulbright Commission has historically given special priority to the preparation of university-level teachers, and many current scholars received their graduate degrees in the United States. A new program in 2001, the Fulbright-Bilkent University Student Teacher Exchange Program, enables 25 Turkish graduate students to participate in an eight-week program at Iowa State University on student-centered teaching and new technology in the classroom. Advising is also a major function, and in 2001 the Commission counseled nearly 30,000 students who were interested in studying in the United States.

The United Kingdom Fulbright Commission held a gala dinner for 500 at the end of January, with Michael Dell, the Chairman and CEO of Dell Computer Corporation as the guest speaker. The UK Secretary of State for Education and the American Ambassador also spoke. Guests included members of the cabinet, members of the Opposition Party, and the chairman and CEOs of 34 of the top 100 UK companies; more than $100,000 was raised for further Fulbright awards.

Later in the year, two Fulbrighters from the United Kingdom won the world debating championship. Alan Merson and Rob Weekes, U.K. students while studying law at New York University on Fulbright Scholarships, were awarded the top honor as World University Debating Champions in Toronto in January. The duo teamed up to debate a motion on prisoners' rights, and sufficiently impressed the judges to merit the championship title. Ninety universities from 30 countries participated in the event, and NYU Law (solely represented by the Fulbrighters) took home the award for the first time in history. It was also the first victory for any team from the northern hemisphere in four years, and only the third win ever for an American university. Merson commented that "The Fulbright Program allowed us to work together, as a U.K. team representing U.S. education...if anything embodied the Fulbright virtues of linking the U.S. and the U.K. — that [winning the championship while representing a U.S. university] had to be it." Weekes added that "The global Fulbright program promotes discussion and discourse amongst different cultures. In winning the World debating competition, we hoped to do exactly that."

AFRICA

Human pressures on traditional elephant feeding grounds are causing increased human-elephant conflict in Botswana. Fulbright Scholar Michelle Gadd, a doctoral student in ecology, focused her dissertation research on human-elephant interaction, and presented her findings to the vice president of Botswana and other high-ranking members of the government. Professor Darrell Ward led a series of workshops on writing about HIV/AIDS for 130 print and broadcast media professionals and HIV/AIDS activists. Alumni of the Fulbright Program, the Humphrey Program, and the International Visitor Program from Botswana helped organize the workshops.

Professor Gilbert Doho, a Fulbright research scholar from Cameroon, was the keynote speaker at the Northern Michigan Indian Educators' Conference at Northern Michigan University. He focused on the importance of popular theater as a tool to address issues such as alcoholism, violence, and Sexually Transmitted Diseases.

During the conference, Dr. Doho directed a performance on HIV awareness. During his Fulbright year, he is working with Native American communities on comparative use of participatory theater for raising social consciousness.

The Humphrey Program alumni in Cameroon, working as volunteers, have developed an education program to fight poverty in urban areas. Their "Training Teachers" project emphasizes civic duties, human rights, and resource management. Their "Big Brother" project serves underprivileged children from 12 to 19 years old.

Shashu Araya Zegeye, a Humphrey Program alumna who studied at Emory University, has won awards for her work in community-based HIV/AIDS in the Tigray region of Ethiopia. Ms. Zegeye is heading an effort to reach 1,200 mothers and 6,000 family members by training traditional birth attendants to communicate culturally-sensitive messages about HIV/AIDS infection and prevention.

In Ghana, Fulbright lecturer Achamyeleh Debela, who is professor of art and Director of the Computing Center for the Arts at North Carolina Central University, presented a month-long exhibition of his work on computer technology in art at the National Museum in Accra. The exhibition was the country's first devoted to digital art. It attracted many prominent people in the arts, legal sector, and government. The U.S. Embassy featured the African-American artist during Black History Month to promote U.S. contributions to Ghanaian education and culture.

During the celebration of International Education Week in November, Fulbright and Humphrey alumni and a current American Fulbrighter in Madagascar conducted a conference on "U.S. International Education" at the new American Cultural Center. Embassy staff emphasized the importance of international education in promoting tolerance and reducing conflict, and encouraged students to consider study in the United States. Twenty-four educators from Nigeria, including university administrators and legislators active in educational policy-making, participated in a six-week summer institute on reform of higher education organized by George Washington University. Dr. Cecilia Amotsuka, who held a Humphrey Program fellowship at Tulane University, has received $10,000 to train health-providers in low-cost screening techniques for cervical cancer. Her goal is to improve the lives of women, especially those with little or no education.

Fulbright alumnus Dr. Arthur Kohn, a specialist in educational technology for medical sciences, added to his previous contributions to sub-Saharan Africa by leading a workshop in Nigeria for journalists, academics, labor leaders, physicians and health care workers, military officers, and officials of NGOs on AIDS in southern Africa. The workshop also generated extensive media coverage. Dr. Kohn recently completed a Fulbright grant at the University of Zimbabwe.

Activities of the Fulbright Program in South Africa have increased dramatically in the two years since a binational Commission was established to run the Fulbright Program. In November, a Fulbright alumni association was launched in Durban, Cape Town, Pretoria, and Port Elizabeth. One hundred and thirty alumni and friends attended the ceremony in Pretoria, which included remarks by the Minister of Education and an award to the first South African to have received a Fulbright grant, composer Stefans Grove, who studied in the United States in 1953.

First South African Fulbrighter, (1953 alumnus), Professor Stefans Grove, receiving the Fulbright Special Award from Professor Kader Asmal, Minister of Education.

The Commission received cost-sharing grants from the U.S. Embassy for regional seminars, for grantee travel, and to establish the alumni association. South African universities more than tripled their cost-sharing contributions for U.S. Fulbright Senior Scholars in this brief period. The Fulbright Teacher Exchange Program has launched a program to send American teachers to South Africa and South Africans to the United States.

The prize-winning documentary film "Long Night's Journey into Day" on Fulbrighter Amy Biehl, who was murdered in South Africa in 1993, was shown by the House Committee on International Relations and featured in an article in The Chronicle of Higher Education. The film won the grand prize at the Sundance Film Festival and the Peace Film Prize at the Berlin Film Festival. The Amy Biehl Foundation Trust, organized by her parents as a living memorial to her work and beliefs, has invested millions of dollars in educating and upgrading the skills of impoverished South African children.

A Fulbright graduate student from Argentina, Alberto Armendariz, was recognized by the Foreign Press Association of New York for articles on the September 11 attacks that were published in Argentina's main national newspaper La Nacion. Armendariz is studying for a Master's Degree in journalism at Columbia University.

In Brazil, more than 235 individuals attended the annual Fulbright Alumni conference in Brasilia in early April. American grantees studying in Brazil and neighboring countries also participated. In order to enhance regional diversity, new leadership and an advisory board were elected by the alumni group.

In Canada, the Commission produced an impressive video featuring Fulbright alumni, as part of its efforts to expand the visibility of the Program and explain the significance of educational exchanges to Canadian audiences. The new Executive Director of Fulbright in Canada, Michael Hawes, showed the video to the Fulbright Board in Washington and described the activities of the Commission. Currently, the Commission is expanding its outreach to Francophones and Francophone institutions, and emphasizing exchanges in public health, security, and privacy.

Before assuming his new post, Dr. Hawes was a professor of political economy at Queens University in Ontario. He was a Fulbright Distinguished Professor of International and Area Studies at the University of California at Berkeley in 1999, and has taught in Mexico and Japan as well as Canada. He has published widely on foreign policy, political culture, international economic relations, and regional integration in North America and East Asia.

Efforts to enlarge the Fulbright Program and to increase its visibility, especially in rural areas, were high on the agenda of the Fulbright Commission in Chile. The Executive Director visited many universities and schools and spoke with administrators, professors, teachers, and students. In addition, the Chilean Alumni Association was re-organized to increase its impact in the country. Fulbrighter Rodrigo Borjas Ceron organized and conducted a benefit concert called "Voices of Hope" for the World Trade Center Relief Fund two months after the terrorist attacks.

In Colombia, the Ministry of Education and the Fulbright Commission sponsored a teacher-training program "Improving English Teaching" for 80 instructors at schools that prepare aspiring educators. Two alumni of the Fulbright Teacher Exchange Program returned to Colombia to conduct the program. The Commission is working to improve the use of English in Colombian schools. The Commission and the University del Norte jointly sponsored a conference in Barranquilla on strategic alliances between universities and the private sector for Colombian-Caribbean Development, and a conference at the University of Illinois of academics and students pursuing Colombian studies.

The Board of the Fulbright Commission in Ecuador, the U.S. Ambassador and other members of the Embassy staff, alumni, current students and scholars, university rectors, and leading members of the business community proudly celebrated the 45th anniversary of the Fulbright Program in Ecuador at the Ambassador's residence. Many distinguished alumni spoke. The rector of the Escuela Politecnica del Litoral, said that 20 of his faculty have participated in the Fulbright Program. Another discussed how his personal experience in engineering and business at Cornell led him to design over 80 pharmaceutical, chemical, and food processing plants in the past three decades. A member of the Commission Board who is the general manager of Lyteca-Texaco discussed the importance of corporate responsibility and supporting programs such as Fulbright as a way of giving back to the communities who sustain business efforts.

The Fulbright Commission in Mexico is making substantial efforts to promote regional diversity. For example, pilot programs in ESL summer workshops for Mexican teachers are being held in four states: Colima, Jalisco, Puebla, and Tamaulipas.

The Commission has four new staff members, including Executive Director Arturo Borja Tamayo, who earned his Ph.D. at Duke University, was a Fulbright Research Scholar there in 1997, and specializes in North American Studies. Dr. Borja was professor of international studies at the Centro de Investigacion y Docencia Economicas (CIDE) in Mexico City before coming to the Commission. He held several administrative appointments at CIDE, including Secretary General and Academic Coordinator of the Program for North American Student Mobility. He is the author of a book on Mexican computer policy, the editor of three other books, and the author of many articles on comparative regional studies and international political economy.

Professor Doel Quinones, who is the Director of the Institute for Conflict Resolution at the Interamerican University of Puerto Rico, lectured and directed workshops on Alternative Conflict Resolution at several law schools in Venezuela. As a result of his work as a Fulbright Senior Specialist, the Latin American Center for Development at the Central University of Venezuela in Caracas will establish a research program in alternative dispute resolution and the University of Carabobo will offer seminars and graduate work in this field.

Sol Levenson

Muralist Sol Levenson began drawing at the age of five. Now in his 90s, he is among Fulbright's oldest scholars. In 2001, when he was 91, he went to Medellin, Colombia as a Fulbright Scholar to lecture on fine and commercial arts and to create an industrial mural about the dams that were constructed to provide water and energy for that city. His previous grants in Mexico in the 1990s involved teaching at the University of Veracruz and working with students on public murals.

Levenson is artist-in-residence at Dartmouth-Hitchcock Medical Hospital and he has taught art and culture in Dartmouth's continuing education program. He has created 17 murals at the oncology center at Dartmouth-Hitchcock, much of his art inspired by Latin American murals. He has been a freelance illustrator and an art instructor for decades.

At age nine, Levenson began violin studies and eventually became a professional musician and conductor in both jazz and chamber music. He attended the Massachusetts College of Art from 1926-1930. His earliest professional work as a muralist was with the WPA from 1935-42, in their Mural Project. "I had retrained myself as a figure artist, illustrator and painter while I was a day laborer during the Depression," Levenson explains. "I have been an autodidact ever since and as a teacher have tried to explain to my students how to become self-teachers."

Levenson is largely self-taught in Spanish, a task he began in the mid-1970s when he was nearly 65. A dozen years later, at an exhibition in Medellin, he was able to give lectures on his work in near-flawless Spanish. He says of his experiences as a Fulbrighter in his 80s and 90s,

"I began life as a muralist on a Government project — and here I am — full circle. Having the most fulfilling experiences of a lifetime again! Thanks to Fulbright, CIES, ...the wonderful people on site — in Mexico and especially now in Medellin, Colombia — as they say in Veracruz "Para servirle" and in Medellin, "Con mucho gusto!"

Reina Webster

Reina Webster (far right) with (l to r) U.S. Ambassador to New Zealand, Charles Swindells, Mrs. Harriet Fulbright and the Hon. Phil Goff, Minister of Foreign Affairs and Trade of New Zealand.

At first glance, New Zealander Reina Webster may seem like a typical Fulbright Student. Like many Fulbrighters, she has intelligence, creativity, and a vision for where she is going. But there is nothing typical about Reina Webster. When she received her Fulbright Grant in 2001 to study Filmmaking at New York University's prestigious Tisch School, she had already journeyed far from her beginnings. Her words describe it best:

She writes, "I am part Maori (the indigenous people of New Zealand) and part European. I was adopted at birth by a European mum and a Maori father (his tribal affiliations are Nga Puhi and Ngati Tuwharetoa). I met my birth parents when I was twenty-five and they mirror the exact racial mix that I was adopted into. My birth father is from the Tuhoie tribe. Lineage to New Zealanders is really important and special and differentiates each of us and unites us.

I had a challenging childhood, at times not all that pleasant, but in retrospect it taught me the skill of independence long before my peers were afforded the privilege....My family life shattered when I was nine and from that moment onwards I was raised by my mother in a number of one bedroom apartments and caravans in and around Christchurch, New Zealand....She was determined to give me a sound education...This ambition she had for me, she paid for dearly, mostly in time and energy. To this day I cannot remember a time where she was not working less than two jobs.

I was repeatedly told in school that I wasn't very smart and left [school] at the earliest opportunity. I wanted to live life, earn money and 'find' myself. Well I found myself and realized pretty early on that if I didn't receive an education I was destined never to reach my true potential....I have never been afraid of hard work or taking risks, nor have I placed boundaries on what I think I am capable of achieving. I have worked for over five years in television and radio learning much about the industry in roles as varied as receptionist, writer, live telecast reporter and even as a game-show hostess....I have also never been a naturally gifted student but I work hard and can be extraordinarily focused....University expanded my mind both intellectually and emotionally. I learnt the more I know, the less I know and the more I want to.

On the 10th of April 2000, I found out that I had been accepted into one of the finest independent film schools in the world, one into which no other New Zealander has ever been accepted.... I will undoubtedly become a successful film director, this I am sure of, and my success will lie in my contribution to the promotion of a country and a culture, which resides firmly in my heart and not in someone's pocket. Film making is all about story telling. Everybody has one; its just so many of them are left untold. I just hope to tell a few in my lifetime, to hold them up for everyone to celebrate. Film is a fantastic medium for that. And as for stories, this is simply one of them."

Overview

Approximately 6,300 grants were awarded to individuals in Fiscal Year 2001. Grants are given to American students, teachers, and scholars to study, teach, lecture and conduct research in more than 140 countries in the world, and foreign nationals to engage in similar activities in the United States.

Individuals are selected on the basis of academic or professional qualifications and leadership potential, plus ability and willingness to share ideas and experiences with people of diverse cultures.

The largest source of funding for the Fulbright Program is an annual appropriation made by the Congress to the Department of State. Participating foreign governments, as well as host institutions in the United States and abroad, contribute through direct funding, as well as by indirect support such as salary supplements, tuition waivers and university housing.

In 2001, the Congressional appropriation to the Department of State for the Fulbright program was $121.7 million. Foreign governments through binational commissions added $29.2 million more. A separate appropriation of $6.68 million was provided for Fulbright programs administered through the Department of Education.

Exchange Programs at the Department of State

Fulbright Student Program

- Offered to U.S. and foreign graduate students and graduating seniors
- 1,109 Americans studied abroad with either full or partial support from the Fulbright Program
- 2,376 foreign students were offered new or renewed grant awards for study at U.S. universities

Fulbright Scholar Program

- Offered to scholars and professionals who lectured and/or conducted research in a wide variety of academic and professional fields in the humanities, social sciences, physical sciences, business administration and American Studies
- 727 Americans studied and taught in 120 foreign countries
- 650 foreign scholars came to the U.S. to lecture or conduct post-doctoral research for an academic year or term
- 30 foreign Scholars-In-Residence spent up to a year teaching on U.S. college and university campuses, with a focus in 2000 on institutions that serve minority audiences such as Historically Black Colleges and Universities, Hispanic Institutions, Tribal Colleges and small liberal arts and community colleges.

Fulbright Teacher and Administrator Exchange Program

- One-on-one exchange of U.S. and foreign teachers and educational administrators, primarily at the secondary level
- 374 participants from over 30 countries worldwide

The Hubert H. Humphrey Fellowship Program

- Mid-level professionals from developing or newly democratized nations come to the U.S. for a year of professional development and academic work at the graduate level
- Grants are given in various fields including public health, economic development, finance and banking, environmental management, educational planning, and law and human rights
- In 2001, there were 147 Humphrey Fellows from 47 countries and regions
- 3,000 Fellows from over 100 countries and regions have participated in the program since its inception

The Fulbright American Studies Institutes

- Grants are made to U.S. host institutions to conduct Institute programs
- In 2001, 204 scholars from 92 countries attended 10 institutes
- Over the past five years, more than 1,000 teachers and scholars from abroad have attended summer institutes in American studies

Fulbright Summer Institutes

- 28 education professionals from South Africa attended a six-week institute at Ohio University concentrating on the teaching of English, curriculum and education reform
- 16 administrators from Francophone and Lusophone Africa attended a six-week program to strengthen management skills for the teaching of English as a foreign language hosted by the University at Buffalo, State University of New York

EXCHANGE PROGRAMS
AT THE DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION

The Modern Foreign Language and Area Studies Training Programs, authorized by Section 102(b)(6) of the Fulbright-Hays Act, are operated by the U.S. Department of Education under a separate Congressional appropriation. Designed to promote and improve modern foreign language training and area studies in the United States without providing for reciprocal exchanges, these programs involved a total of 857 Americans in 2001.

The Fulbright-Hays Doctoral Dissertation Research Abroad Program

- Awarded 129 fellowships, through U.S. institutions of higher education, to Ph.D. candidates to engage in full-time dissertation research abroad in modern foreign languages and area studies
- Emphasis of study was on languages and areas not commonly taught in the United States

The Fulbright-Hays Faculty Research Abroad Program

- Awarded 26 fellowships, through U.S. institutions of higher education, state departments of education, and private nonprofit educational organizations

The Fulbright-Hays Group Projects Abroad Program

- Awarded 733 grants to U.S. institutions of higher education, state departments of education, and private nonprofit educational organizations
- Grants are for group projects in research, training and curriculum development

The Fulbright-Hays Seminars Abroad

- 155 U.S. teachers, school administrators, social studies supervisors, and curriculum directors participated in short-term seminars overseas
- Seminars focused on the history, culture and language of participating foreign country
- Many of these seminars have been initiated through bilateral agreements between the Department of Education and selected ministries abroad

Principal Organizations for the Fulbright Program

J. William Fulbright Foreign Scholarship Board

The J. William Fulbright Foreign Scholarship Board was created by Congress to supervise the Fulbright educational exchange program. The intent was to establish an impartial and independent body which would assure the respect and cooperation of the academic world for the educational exchange program, particularly in the selection of grantees and of educational institutions qualified to participate. The Board sets policies and procedures for administration of the program, has final responsibility for approving selection of all grantees, and supervises the conduct of the program both in the United States and abroad. Appointed by the President of the United States, the Board is composed of 12 members drawn from academic, cultural and public life.

U.S. Department of State

The U.S. Department of State's Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs (ECA) serves as the administrative and executive arm of the Fulbright Program. Since October 1, 1999 authority over the program rests with the Secretary of State but is then delegated to the Under Secretary for Public Diplomacy and Public Affairs who then gives this authority to the Assistant Secretary for Educational and Cultural Affairs. ECA has fiscal responsibility for the preparation of an annual budget request to Congress and makes decisions on how allocations of the funds, finally approved by Congress, will be made to participating countries. Under policies established by the Fulbright Foreign Scholarship Board, Bureau staff administers the Fulbright exchange program, negotiates agreements covering educational interchange with foreign governments, maintains liaison with U.S. Embassies overseas on exchanges, and, in Washington, seeks the help and cooperation of other U.S. government and private agencies on certain aspects of the program. In U.S. Embassies abroad, exchange program activities are the responsibility of a Public Affairs Officer or a Cultural Affairs Officer. At least one of these officers is a member of the local binational commission and maintains for the Bureau the liaison with the commission on policy and program matters. In countries where there is no commission, the Cultural Affairs Officer or Public Affairs Officer administers the educational exchange program.

U.S. Department of Education

The U.S. Department of Education's Office of Postsecondary Education administers the Modern Foreign Language and Areas Studies program authorized by section 102 (b)(6) of the Fulbright-Hays Act. This program differs from other Fulbright-Hays activities in that its objectives are research and training with no provision for lecturing assignments overseas and no direct exchanges. The program is meant to improve U.S. education in modern foreign language and area studies, and is a part of the U.S. educational effort in those fields.

Cooperating Organizations for the Fulbright Program

The Institute of International Education (IIE) handles day-to-day supervision of the majority of foreign student grantees in the United States and assists in a preliminary review of U.S. student candidates competing for awards. IIE also supervises the Humphrey Fellowship Program, which brings to the United States mid-career professionals from developing countries.

The Council for International Exchange of Scholars (CIES), affiliated with the Institute of International Education, assists in the exchange of lecturers and research scholars. It conducts a preliminary selection of U.S. lecturer and research scholar candidates and assists in the day-to-day administration of the exchange program for research scholars and lecturers from abroad.

LASPAU: Academic and Professional Programs for the Americas assists in the administration of the Fulbright Faculty Development Program for Latin America and the Caribbean Amazon Basin Scholarship Program. They also assist with the Caribbean and Central America Ecology Program and collaborate with Fulbright Commissions in the Americas to increase cost-sharing agreements.

AMIDEAST, with field offices in the Middle East and North Africa, arranges study in the United States for graduate students from the region and handles the day-to-day supervision of these students.

The International Institute of the Graduate School of the U.S. Department of Agriculture assists in administration and recruitment for the one-on-one exchange of Fulbright Teachers. This includes processing of U.S. applicants and the matching of U.S. participants with foreign counterparts.

The Academy for Educational Development (AED) provides support to the Fulbright Educational Partnership Program, which promotes cooperation between U.S. colleges and universities and foreign post-secondary institutions through faculty and staff exchanges designed to ensure a broad and coherent institutional impact. AED coordinates the independent review of proposals by professional and scholarly experts and assists in the development of projects.

Other Organizations Supporting the Fulbright Program

The Fulbright Association

The Fulbright Association, the U.S.-based private, nonprofit membership organization of Fulbright alumni and friends, supports the Fulbright Program through advocacy, public education, and enrichment programs for visiting Fulbrighters. There are sister Fulbright alumni organizations in approximately 60 other countries. The U.S. association has more than 6,000 individual members and 160 colleges, universities and international organizations that participate as institutional members. Chapters in 41 areas throughout the United States, organized by alumni volunteers, acquaint visiting Fulbrighters with their host communities.

The Fulbright Association also sponsors the J. William Fulbright Prize for International Understanding and an annual conference. The 24th annual conference explored the topic “Transforming Transitions: A Fulbright Perspective” and included panels on the digital divide, art as ambassador, and shaping civil society. The Fulbright Association also administers the Selma Jeanne Cohen Fund for International Scholarship on Dance, which supports an endowed lecture on dance history or scholarship at the Association’s conference. Robin Grove of the University of Melbourne in Australia gave the 2001 Cohen Fund Lecture.

PRINCIPAL ORGANIZATIONS OVERSEAS FOR THE FULBRIGHT PROGRAM

Binational Commissions

There are now 51 active binational commissions in countries which have entered into executive agreements with the United States to conduct a program of educational exchanges. Belgium and Luxembourg share a single commission in Brussels. In addition, there is a Fulbright office serving Taiwan. They are always binational, composed equally of distinguished national educators and cultural leaders and of Americans from the U.S. Embassy and the resident American community. A commission’s purpose is to administer the educational exchange program on an impartial and binational basis, to assure that grantees and educational institutions participating in the program are qualified to do so, and to plan and propose educational exchanges that are in keeping with the needs and educational resources of each country.

Hubert H. Humphrey
FELLOWSHIP PROGRAM

“We, a family of Humphrey Fellows, will bring a great spirit of mutual understanding and willingness to make this world, our village, country, region, and global community, a better place to live,” writes Birute Mockiene as Lithuania’s premier Humphrey Fellow.

The Humphrey Fellowship Program combines graduate-level academic work with a professional affiliation in the public, private, or non-profit sector. Fellows are placed in non-degree programs at universities around the United States in clusters according to professional and academic interests.

Since the Program’s creation in 1978, nearly 3,000 professionals have participated from 120 countries. The United States Congress through the State Department’s Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs provides funding for the program. The J. William Fulbright Foreign Scholarship Board has overall responsibility for the final selection of Humphrey Fellows.

International Women’s Day at the U.S. Department of State included participation by Humphrey Fellow, Betty Kemal Taruc. Ms. Taruc, from Indonesia, is director of the Alifa Foundation and founder of the Mantif Foundation, a training and counseling center for women and families in Jakarta. She is also senior clinical psychologist at the Wisma Adiksi Drug Abuse Treatment Center. As a Humphrey Fellow, Ms. Taruc focused on community-based mental health programs for drug abuse prevention and treatment. The Johns Hopkins University’s Department of Mental Hygiene hosts the program in the fields of drug and alcohol abuse policy, treatment and prevention.

During the 2000-2001 year Humphrey Fellows spent ten months at one of twelve U.S. universities. In addition to their academic work, Humphrey Fellows develop ties with their American professional counterparts in many ways. They visit organizations, consult and work with experts in their areas of professional interest, and participate in community outreach. Fellows also attend conferences together with their colleagues, such as the Washington Seminar.

In the Humphrey Fellows annual report 2000-2001, Sylvia Zulu was quoted saying, “how powerful the Hubert Humphrey Fellowship Program network is – whatever continent I travel to, there will always be at least one member of the HHH family that I can contact.”

In January, the Nepal Association of Humphrey Fellows in cooperation with the Nepal Fulbright Commission and the U.S. Embassy in Kathmandu arranged an alumni conference for South Asian Humphrey alumni. Fifty-three Humphrey alumni met in Nepal’s capital for four days in February to discuss “Good Governance in South Asia.” Due to the restrictions against the utilization of Indian airspace by Pakistani aircraft, the delegation from Pakistan traveled overnight to connect in Bangkok in order to attend the conference. At the concluding session, one of the delegates from Pakistan expressed his appreciation for “the very special relationship and dialogue that we have developed and enjoyed with the delegates from India. Despite tensions on our borders, our experiences this week remind us of the potential for understanding between our countries.” By the end of the conference, the Indian and Pakistani Humphrey alumni could be heard singing traditional Punjabi songs late into the night.

In September 2001, The Korea Institute of Public Administration and Korean Humphrey Alumni organized a regional conference on “The Changing Role of Government in the 21st Century.”

This year, a new opportunity has been created specifically for Humphrey Alumni. Alumni Impact Awards allow Humphrey Fellows to pursue objectives that expand the impact of the knowledge and skills they gained as a result of their Humphrey experiences. The awards are jointly funded by the U.S. Department of State’s Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs and the Institute of International Education Legacy Fund. One award recipient, Dr. Jiatong Zhuo (Emory University, 1997-98), received a grant to publish and distribute in China the first Chinese language training manual on the subject of sexually transmitted infections.

Significant accomplishments have been seen in the Fellows’ employment, development of knowledge and skills, contacts with Americans and other Fellows, and understanding of America. For example, this year, Humphrey Alumnus Alan Kyerematen was named Ambassador to the United States from Ghana. The Humphrey Fellowship year enriches multinational communities of professionals, implementing long-lasting developments at home and abroad.

For more information on the Hubert H. Humphrey Fellowship Program, please contact the Humphrey Fellows Office, United States Department of State, 301 4th Street SW, Washington, D.C. 20547, Telephone: 202-619-5298.
